Welcome to August's Gallery! To quote Bob Marley 'Sun is shining, the weather is sweet, yeah. Make you wanna move your dancing feet now'. Kind of appropriate I think. This month we have a bang load of good things going on for our entertainment.

Not only do we have a Jerseylive coming up at the end of the month but also we have Xavier Rudd at the Grassroots festival at St Ouen the weekend before, Yoda and Milo at the castle on the 16th and a myriad of other summer entertainment options, many of which you'll find featured over the coming pages. Don't miss our Gallery Silent Disco, to be seen at events over the summer. Silence is golden.

As our theme this month is 'Decades' and after the success of last month's 'Love on the town' we have Stella Six back with her view of Jersey dating, it seemed to really strike a chord. This month she looks at the 'Decade-Dance' (page 10). We take a look at fashion through the decades with our shoot. We also look at music's ability to guide the counter culture with a look at the 'Emo' (page 48).

I'll use this last paragraph to gratuitously publicise our charity event coming up in September. DODGEBALL! (See the ad on page 20), an excuse to throw balls at people and raise money for charity. Remember the five main rules of dodgeball: Dodge, Duck, Dip, Dive, and Dodge.

The sun is shining... and the weather is fine – so get yourselves outside in August! Here's Gallery's guide to the best outdoor activities this month...

Outdoor - film

Get out your picnic blanket and pack yourself a picnic hamper - the alfresco Jersey Film Festival returns to Howard Davis Park. This year supported by Sure, the programme promises a fabulous mix of family favourites and film classics as voted for by you. It beats sitting in a stuffy cinema – and it's free. So sit back, crack open the cava and enjoy your favourite films with a sunset backdrop.

The Sure Picture Show, Howard Davis Park from 16th to 22nd August, 8.30pm

Outdoor - fun

Ok so it's not as sunny as Bencassim, but if you can't wait for Jersey Live, hop across the Channel for the legendary Route du Rock – in its 18th year, this ultra-cool festival boasts Tindersticks, The Breeders, Foals, Sigur Rós and The Ting Tings on its line up as well as the best up-and-coming European talent.

[La Route du Rock, Saint-Malo. 14th, 15th and 16th August, \[www.laroutedurock.com\]\(#\)](#)
Festival pass, 85 euros, single day 30 euros

Outdoor - food

The gorgeous new Oyster Box on St Brelade's Bay has finally opened – bringing you the most stylish summer lunches all with that stunning view. The Jersey Pottery team serve up sushi, tempura squid, crab linguini and organic oysters on the beautiful beach terrace. It'll make your city-dwelling friends green with envy....

The Oyster Box Beach Bar & Restaurant, open for lunch and dinner Tues – Sat and Sunday lunch. Tel: 743311

Outdoor – on your bike

With a weekly fill-up now eye-wateringly expensive, leaving your car at home and cycling to work makes so much more sense. Pedal Power has a great range of bikes from hybrids – a cross between a mountain bike and a racer, to sportsters - like a racer but with flat handlebars. Light, fast and with plenty of gears, these bikes will save you a packet on petrol and beat the traffic all at the same time...

Kit yourself out with a bike and helmet – prices start from £300
Pedal Power, 57 Bath Street, St Helier, Tel: 739385

Outdoor – adrenalin rush

Deathly dull summer holidays? Nothing to do at the weekend? Liven things up with the new Vertical Limits activity at the Pure Adventure Centre – an hour and a half session designed to push you to your limit. Test your mettle on the King Swing, the Loop of Faith and the Free Fall Jump to name just a few ... and then do it all again.

Vertical Limits costs around £25 \(£20 child rate\) and is suitable for ages 8 and above.

Love on the town

The Decade-dance

So, 'Single in Jersey'...Again. In Jersey, once you have got through a Jersey Break-up (see July edition), you are ready to embark on your solo adventure, to find Love on the Town even. But first, I suggest you check you are truly through the break-up – ask yourself the following questions...

Have you perfected the King Street "body-swerve"? And the uniquely 'Jersey', we-may-well-have-known-each-other-very-well-once-but-now-we-don't avoidance stare? On larger land masses you can move gracefully, and gradually onto new groups and cliques, filtering out your old life without hurt feelings. Much more brutal here - you have to edit. And frankly to get any shopping done in your lunch hour you don't have time to say hello to every person you or your ex used to know.

Have you found bearable accommodation? If you have qualies, ideally you have bought something to avoid the temptation to "rush into the next one" and if you don't, ideally you have found a fabulous house share with lots of parties.

Okay, you're good with the first two questions? You feel ready? Well what about number three...

Have you got excited about meeting new people, looked around and realised that on Jersey, there are no new people, panicked, thought about going back to your ex, then, sobbing, alone whilst eating some sort of carbohydrate based food, decided no, no, must really soldier on?

When everyone knows everyone, and even the vaguest stranger can be traced back to your closest friends in six steps or less, you face a plethora of mental barriers in your quest for love. From the “ick” factor of finding out who slept with who, to the “that guy is a total knob, he once had ‘relations’ with a cat” type opinions and stories (often offered un-asked-for by ‘concerned’ friends). And I think it is perhaps because of this there is a tendency in Jersey to look beyond the standard criteria when looking for a mate. In particular, I have begun to notice how often different generations hook up in Jersey.

When people have exhausted their own age groups, (not to mention gone to school with a fair few of them), I think in Jersey, more than most places, there is a willingness to move the age boundaries. Now I’m not just talking about the “Gold-Digga’s” – those bright young things with their super-tanned décolletages and the stench of Gucci Rush (although admittedly, there is a case in point). I have recently noticed a whole selection of twenty-something Jersey guys with thirty-something Jersey women. One very gorgeous thirty-something brunette I know is currently enjoying what can only be described a Classic Romance with a vivacious, funny twenty-something guy, and I have to say, they’ve got something there. Her confidence and sweet, coolness delights him, whilst his energy and giving nature makes her glow. The small age gap doesn’t matter when you have nights in laughing with Chinese and horror flicks – in my book, classic stuff.

When people have exhausted their own age groups, (not to mention gone to school with a fair few of them), I think in Jersey, more than most places, there is a willingness to move the age boundaries.

Equally, I see true love when I look at another friend, where she is the younger model to his older man. Not a case of digging here, just two of the nicest people in the world being smart enough to expand their criteria a bit, to open their minds to the potential in each other. They have a beautiful baby girl now and a lovely home. He appreciates the warmth and honesty she brought him, she adores his strength and kindness. He is rich, but in every way...

So should I be expanding my checklist a bit? It seems most of Jersey is. Last week I was asked out by a 51 year old and a 21 year old in the same night. They were charming, both funny, both polite, both keen. In the end I gave out my phone number, but didn’t take up the offered drinks and dinner. Was it their ages that put me off? Maybe... But I think it was because I’m still enjoying the decadence of being single, of being selfish, of wandering around my new flat in my underwear, swigging wine straight from the bottle, chain-smoking, listening to the Delfonics over and over again because I want to. And maybe it’s because I’ve got this feeling, when the time is right, he’ll just be there.

Parlez Ponglish?

Britain's million Poles have made up a secret slang that no-one but them can understand.

The mixture of Polish and English - dubbed Ponglish - has developed so quickly it has become a cult language with young immigrants.

UK Poles no longer pay 'podatki' (taxes), but British 'taksy'; they travel by 'tuba' (tube) and they complain about the 'trafik' (traffic).

They spend 'kesh' (cash,) take 'offy' (days off) and make 'fony' or 'cally' (phone calls) to their 'frendy' (friends.)

Ponglish has developed so thoroughly, it already has its own entry in the Polish version of Wikipedia.

It's described as a language spoken by Poles living in the British Isles which takes English words and gives them Polish endings, or translates English idioms and grammatical structures literally into Polish.

"Young people love it because no-one knows what they're talking about. Neither their Polish parents nor the English adults have got a clue what they're saying," said one Ponglish speaker.

"To talk" in Ponglish is no longer 'rozmawiac,' as in Polish, but 'speaknonch' (written: 'spiknac') from the English, 'to speak.'

To drive is not 'jechać' as in Polish, but 'driveneech' (written: 'drajwnic,') from the English, to drive.

And UK Poles have become so British, they have even stopped making love (kochac sie) and instead just 'meeyech sex' (written: 'miec sex.')

Hooray for biscuits! (...and unsightly bulges)

The custard cream has finally made it into the Oxford English Dictionary - after 100 years.

Literary experts decided it was time the vanilla-filled snack was included when nine out of 10 people voted it their top biscuit in a survey.

It joins a host of new words to make the 11th edition of the dictionary - including muffin top, sleb and cosplay, reports the Daily Mirror.

Muffin top is described as "a roll of fat visible above the top of a pair of women's tight-fitting low-waist trousers".

Celebrity, already shortened to celeb, undergoes a further shrinkage to sleb and cosplay describes the practice of dressing up as a character from a film, TV show or book.

Also making their debuts are the terms car crash and train wreck - as in "her life is turning into a car crash".

Once you pop...

The US designer who invented the Pringles tube was so proud of his achievement he's been buried in one.

Fredric J Baur asked for some of his ashes to be put in a tube and interred in a grave in his home city of Cincinnati.

Baur, who died at 89, created the tube and the curved system for stacking the potato snacks inside it in 1966.

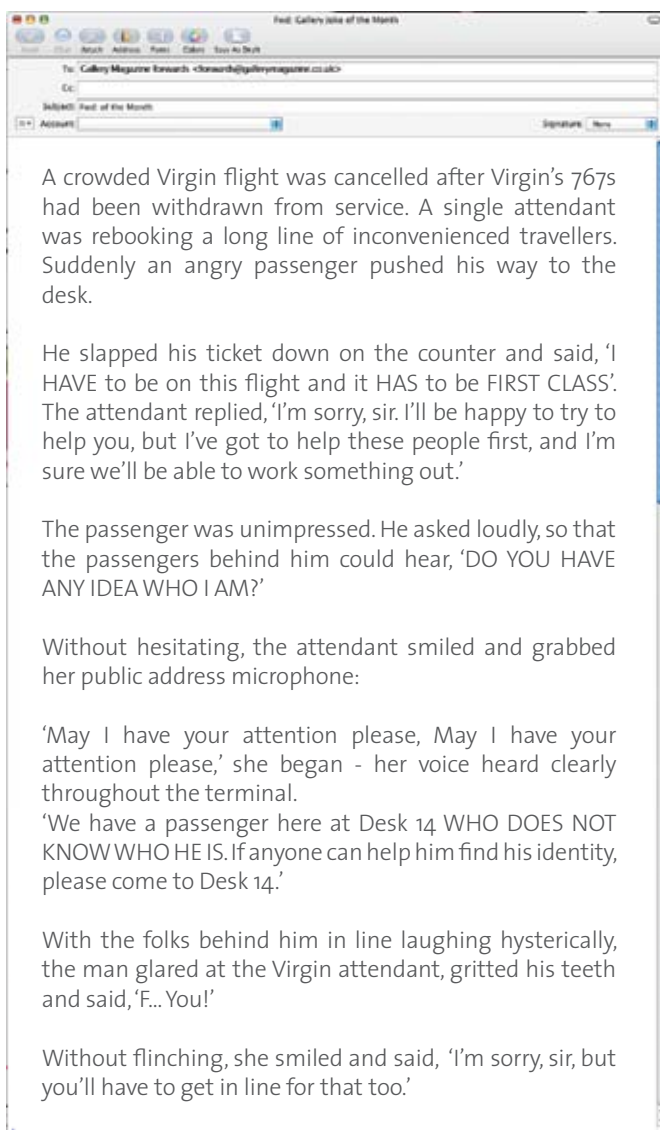

Baur's children honoured his request to bury him in one of the cans by placing part of his cremated remains in a Pringles container in his grave.

The rest of his remains were placed in an urn buried along with the can, with some placed in another urn and given to a grandson, said Baur's daughter Linda.

Baur was an organic chemist and food storage technician who specialised in research and development and quality control for Procter & Gamble, who still make Pringles.

goingup? goingdown?

Here at Gallery we have a board of what's hot and what's not and this month we've decided to go public. Got any ideas for next month? Let us know by sending an email to: editorial@gallerymagazine.co.uk

Scintology!

This month we've decided to share with you one of the founding forefather of Scientology, L. Ron Hubbard's '5 most impressive lies (besides Scientology)' that we came across this month.

#1 - On Inventing the Concept of a Moral Code

He Said: His 1981 pamphlet The Way to Happiness was the first moral code (in the history of the universe) based entirely on common sense. By following the 21 precepts outlined in this revolutionary, yet common sense approach to morality, entire communities are transformed into Utopian paradises that resemble the everything-is-made-of-candy room in Willie Wonka and the Chocolate Factory.

Unlike most moral codes, which are based entirely on Jello Pudding Pops and the lyrics to Journey songs, Hubbard's world-altering grocery list-slash-booklet was offering the world principles that heretoforthwith had never, not even once, been organized and stated so conveniently. And thus they were revolutionary.

But Actually: It turns out that there was already a few "morality codes" or "bullet points for being good" that had been established in list format! Some even predating Hubbard's by at least 100 years! There's this one list, called 'The Ten Commandments' that even had some of Hubbard's same points! Observe:

'The Ten Commandments'
Author: God, or maybe Moses
9 - Do not murder.

'The Way to Happiness'
Author: L. Ron Hubbard
8 - Do not murder.

Well, maybe Hubbard let it slip his mind. All moral codes are bound to overlap at one point:

'The Ten Commandments'
#5 - Honor your mother and father

'The Way to Happiness'
5 - Honor and help your parents.

Oh come on L. Ron, that's just sloppy. You didn't even attempt to realign the numbers!

Appeal for 'FAIL' photos

Caught someone or something in the midst of an unfortunate incident that deserves the 'FAIL' tag (see Gallery 42, June 08) Obviously, we don't want people going out and hurting themselves on purpose just for 15 minutes of local fame and we're not encouraging such antics, but if anybody has taken any photos of unlucky mishaps that cash in on other people's misfortune send them to FAIL@gallerymagazine.co.uk

We had a really good time doing our gallery rally earlier this year and thought we should develop a charity event closer to home that more people can get involved with.

After we took part in a friends birthday party and played dodgeball, the spirit of Patches O Hoolihan grabbed hold and told us - dodgeball is it.

We figured what better excuse to throw balls at your friends, co-workers and competitors. So, pick your costumes, get your team of 6 (and up to 4 reserves) together and register your team and download a sponsorship form at

(walk-about street theatre)

Friday 1st & Saturday 2nd August

With cremation being favoured these days, gravediggers now just can't find work. Like the pallbearers who wander through the city with a coffin, these gravediggers are preoccupied with their dying art and the dead end that lies before them. However, they just don't seem to be able to get things right.

Awarded 'Best Foreign Production' at the Ansan Street Arts Festival, HumÖrtal invites the audience to join in the procession or even step into the coffin. A hysterically funny act that will have spectators 'dying' with laughter.

Just when you thought it was safe to go back into the courtroom

It's usually around this time of year that Lady X and I tend to tire of the panoply of delights found in Jersey and start to look further afield for our kicks. After all, there's only so many times you can direct tourists to Grosnez (when they asked for directions to Gorey) and even the cows tend to get a bit wary after they've been drunkenly pushed over ten or eleven times.

Ironically, the only time I've ever had a shotgun pointed at me in earnest was when I was soberly trying to return a cow to its owner having found it wandering on a country road at 2am while driving back from a night out – I was about three inches from turning it into the world's largest kebab as I came round a corner at a speed I later described as 'about 40 miles per hour' and my screaming passengers called 'warp factor 6'.

On impulse, I decided to do a good deed by hopping out of the car and leading Begonia Masterpiece IV (or whatever her name was) towards the nearest cowshed and was soon rewarded by the sight of one of St. Ouen's more rural denizens lurching towards me, swathed in a tartan dressing gown and brandishing a shotgun that (much like its owner) had probably last seen action in 1956. It took me a good few minutes before I was able to persuade my interrogator that I was leading his beloved animal towards rather than away from the farm but eventually (and without thanking me) he sullenly repossessed the creature, which was led away with a faint expression of horror in its eyes.

Anyway, getting back to the subject, it is a sad fact that due to the demanding nature of my much maligned and misunderstood profession, I have to treat holidays like the Belgians treat children, and snatch them when I can. As a result, my holiday experiences have been a bit hit-and-miss - as on the occasion when I booked a last-minute trip to one of the nicer bits of Majorca. Sadly, what the travel agent neglected to mention was that the entire town where the hotel was located became occupied by the Germans (if that isn't an unfortunate choice of phrase) during the high season and so we ended up being the only couple for a mile in any direction who weren't of the teutonic persuasion.

All of the shops and restaurants were run and staffed by Germans with barely a local to be seen – and much like Magaluf is full of fish-and-chip shops and bars with bulldogs and tatty union jacks adorning the walls (and the arms of most of the customers), the place we were staying was full of Wurst emporiums and barely repressed sadism.

We decided to make the best of things and so after a week, my German had improved to the extent that I could tell a barmaid how to make a decent Cuba Libre and Lady X could shock annoying kids by telling them to * right off. I was also developing a worrying taste for schnitzel. The worst part was that the sun didn't really show up and so by the time we went home we felt like and finding it full of – gasp - nasty foreigners (albeit not the kind he expected) that it turned out that a large wad of cash was the only thing that could salve his delicate feelings. The Judge - deciding in the toy-throwers favour – believed that the customers at a hotel featured in an English-language brochure should be provided for in their own language - in effect, that the whole world should make a bit more of an effort to make up for the average holidaymaker's linguistic shortcomings. I feel a more suitable judgment would have involved sending the plaintiff to Piraeus and making him stay there for a fortnight (or until he committed suicide, whichever came first) so that he could appreciate what a really terrible holiday was like. NB – for the avoidance of doubt I have been to Piraeus and can strongly advise you to avoid the area like a particularly plague-infested rat of loose moral fibre.

“I would have a great deal of sympathy for such a person. However (and you've probably seen this coming), Mr Thompson was American.”

we'd been on some pointless work-organized cultural exchange program (although we had a strange feeling that next year we should annex Austria).

I'd now like you to contrast our response to adversity with that of David Barnish. David was put in a strangely similar situation by his holiday operator, who took his family to the Grecotel Park Hotel in Kos, only to find that 25 of the 700 guests at the hotel were English and the remainder were mostly German. However, instead of displaying the requisite stiff upper lip and girded loins displayed by Brits found in movies from the fifties and sixties (which, after the drunken yob, is the second most popular stereotype held by Europeans), Mr Barnish decided to complain and whinge his way to the nearest lawyer's office and brought an action against the travel company for compensation.

The poor diddums was so unable to cope with going to a foreign country

Another hapless holidaymaker who defied all common sense is Krishna Thompson. Mr Thompson went on holiday in the Bahamas and was having a lovely time, right up until the moment when he went for a swim and a shark bit his left leg off. Now, there's no detracting from the fact that having your leg messily removed by a barely-evolved chewing machine with fins is not anyone's idea of a good time – in fact, it regularly features in my all-time top ten nightmares and Lady X didn't even get into a swimming pool for a couple of years after watching Jaws.

Although I've read stories of surfers who have heroically jumped straight back into the water after they had parts of them nibbled off by sharks, I could totally understand someone needing years of physical rehabilitation and therapy before going near a beach. I would have a great deal of sympathy for such a person. However (and you've probably seen this coming), Mr Thompson was American. Therefore, the fact that Mother Nature had pushed him a couple of notches down the food chain was not a freak and unpreventable accident – SOMEONE MUST BE TO BLAME. He therefore adopted the traditional US approach to fair valuation of loss and sued his hotel for $25,000,000 as they hadn't stopped it happening.

Now, I'm not sure what exactly they could have done to stop him from looking like a tasty canapé to a leviathan of the deep (short of sending in Aquaman), and I'm not sure I care. Even if someone has genuinely suffered - and incidentally I'm not including the additional claim for $5,000,000 filed by Mr Thompson's wife for the distress the incident caused her in this category - punishing people for things that are outside their control sends the wrong message to everyone about personal responsibility.

Even though it's bad for business, I often end up advising people that sometimes you fundamentally have to accept that 1) it just isn't your day and 2) this isn't anyone else's fault - and if they complain when they get the bill for this particular pearl of wisdom I'm forced to refer them to point 1) again...

The International Private Equity Services Group Launch Party

There was a lot to celebrate for the IPES team as they threw their first party in their brand new state of the art Esplanade office. The new Jersey team is headed by Managing Director Andrew Mason who said "I am delighted and very excited by the opportunity to join IPES and broaden their product offering to include Jersey. The private equity sector is a dynamic and growing one, despite the recent credit crunch. I believe that our Jersey team is perfectly positioned to drive the business forward with our combined expertise".

Executive Chairman, Connie Helyar adds "I would like to extend a warm welcome to Andrew and his team to the IPES Group. The Company's growth in Guernsey and London has been phenomenal over the last ten years and we are confident that this success will continue with our Jersey Operation."

Thomas & Dessain Double Celebration

Around 100 clients, candidates, contacts and friends joined the team at Thomas & Dessain for a cocktail party in early July. Taking advantage of the good weather to use the attractive new urban garden, the guests toasted Thomas & Dessain's acquisition and stylish refurbishment of Central Chambers in Hill Street and the completion of 10 years of successful growth.

Rosy Dessain, Managing Director and founder of the international executive search, selection and development firm commented; "The move to our own building underpins the next stage of our development and we look forward to continuing to serve the CI market by sourcing high quality candidates, both locally and further afield".

The Royal Yacht First Birthday

There was a great turn out for this exciting event. The three tribute bands; So Blondie, Scizzor Sisterz and So 80's were warmly welcomed by a dancefloor full of party goers. Chairman James Taylor said "The first birthday of The Royal Yacht has marked the end of an exciting year for us and the start of many many more! This summer we are proving to be busy and vibrant in all areas with both locals and overseas guests enjoying the facilities. The Drift and Café Zephyr have cemented themselves as two of the most popular venues in the island, attracting a diverse multitude of people. We look forward to seeing what the next year brings for us and are hoping to see growth in the popularity of Restaurant Sirocco, now that the Weighbridge park is completed."

Brewin Dolphin Party at Sirrocco

The reason for this party was two-fold: to celebrate moving into their new office in Kingsgate House and an opportunity to say thank-you to their clients for the continued support. There was sunny weather, cold champagne, tasty food and thankfully the building works at the old Weighbridge site was finished!

Brewin Dolphin has had a presence in Jersey for nearly 36 years and has now outgrown their former Charing Cross offices. Brewin Dolphin is the largest independent private client investment manager in the UK. They manage £21 billion of funds for over 120,000 clients. The Company is also corporate adviser to 131 corporate and 100 institutional clients.

The Grand Hotel Festival of Food

This fun and tasty weekend marked the re-launch of the multi-million pound Hotel's refurbishment! The Grand now has an 800sq ft Elemis spa, champagne lounge, terrace, 122 stunning interior designed bedrooms, state of the art meeting and event centre and the Island's only private cinema. The event was overseen by The Grand's consultant chef Albert Roux – described as the godfather of modern cuisine – and was attended by a selection of some of the UK's finest Michelin starred chefs. No-one could resist the cocktails being made by one of Britain's most talented Mixologists Joel Lawrence, and everyone was impressed as they watched raw ingredients turned into beautiful and delicious canapés right in front of their eyes.

Jersey Association of Trust Companies annual dinner at The Jersey Pottery Sponsored by Collins Stewart Wealth Management

The evening got off to an excellent start; as everyone arrived they were treated to a champagne reception sponsored by Infracore Technology. The Toastmaster then ushered everyone to take their seats for a fantastic Jersey Pottery three course dinner. The highlight of the evening was Guest Speaker Pete Goss telling stories of his adventures at sea, which left everyone in agreement that he was one of the most impressive speakers they had ever heard.

The black tie event, which was attended by leading figures from the Island's finance industry was a definite success and the partying went on into the small hours.

RBC celebrates Canada Day

People's Park was the venue for this elaborate celebration of the Bank's home country's national day. Over 400 employees and friends turned up, many dressed in the Canadian flag's colours of red and white. The most popular area of the party was outside Rojo's new alfresco cocktail bar.

There was a traditional hog roast and Canadian style chicken to keep people going and local band Ad Hoc were complementing the evening's celebrations by incorporating music by Canadian artists.

Charity Event Corner

Such are their prolific charity raising efforts that Jean and Jackson Lowe have become synonymous with fundraising events. Jean joined us on the Gallery Rally this year and although each car only needed to raise a contribution of £1500, Jean blew that away with a total of £5134.94! She asked if we could mention it!

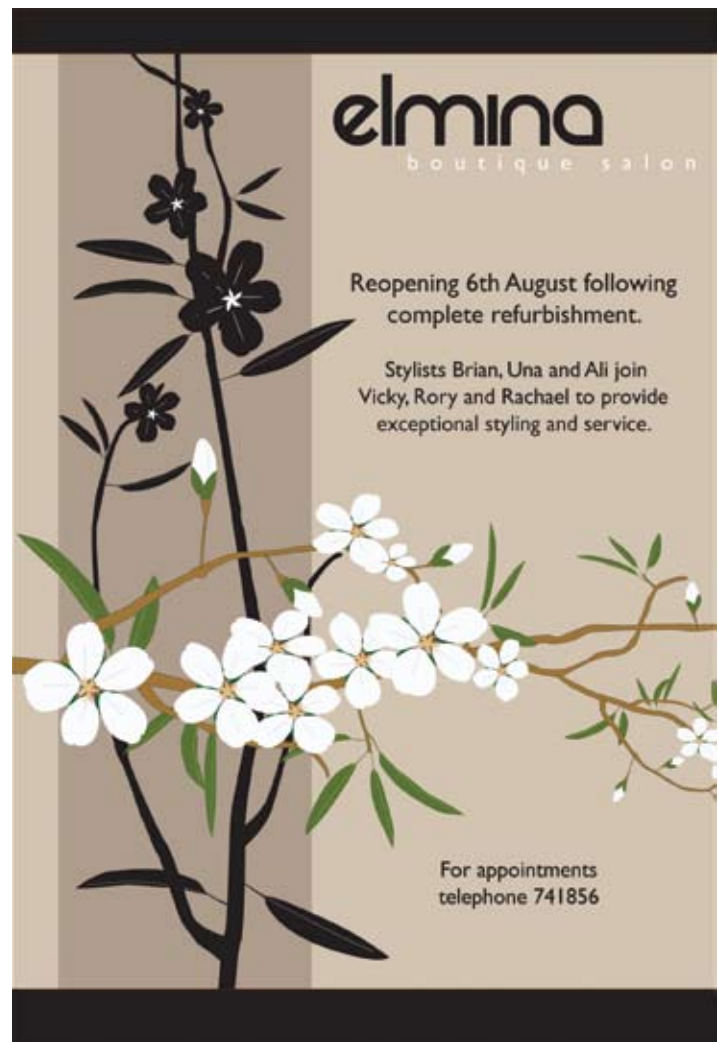

Thank you!

Jean Lowe and Joanie Merrick wish to say a huge Thank You to all those who very kindly sponsored us in The Gallery Monaco Rally, to those who helped us with our fundraising events and to those who kindly donated prizes for our raffle. We raised a total of 5,134.94 for Jersey Hospice Care. Barcelona 2009 here we come!!!!

...meanwhile Jackson is organising another event down at the Dicq shack to raise money for the 'Hands Around The World' Charity. Expect chilled out tunes and a relaxed atmosphere. Like it says on the ticket - the same as last year's event (that a load of people seemed to enjoy!) but probably a bit better. Get down on the 24th August and check it out. Call Jacko on 07797 772548 for your ticket!

eye spy: the lazy jogger

EYE-SPY_

The Lazy Jogger

'Bye!' calls Susan cheerfully as she closes the front door and leaves her family to do the washing up. Monday, Wednesday and Friday evenings, like clockwork, you'll see Susan parking her Fiesta on the Avenue ready for her jog.

With her new Nike Air Max shoes, iPod charged up and power drink in hand, Susan certainly looks the part as she sets off towards St. Aubin. Her family and friends can't quite understand why, after three months of regular jogging, Susan hasn't lost any weight at all. If anything – she might be looking a bit tubbier.

If they followed her down to the Avenue, they'd discover why. Susan's a lazy jogger. Rather than running – or even jogging – Susan shuffles. It's walking in a sort of jogging motion. She's read an article that says novice joggers should be taking it slowly at first, so she makes sure she doesn't go much above walking speed. That way she avoids getting sweaty – or even out of breath. After all, she wouldn't want anyone from the trust team seeing her all red in the face.

The same article said that just ten minutes of brisk walking can make a difference. And of course it would, if she laid off the Lucozade Sport. It probably doesn't help that her jogging route finishes at the burger bar. 'But I've burned all those calories,' Susan thinks to herself, 'I'll treat myself to a double cheeseburger and a coke'. All those cafes along Victoria Avenue certainly come in handy when she has a stitch. She always has to sit down for a bit to recover, and a nice cup of tea and a chocolate bar helps her to get her breath back.

Signature Behaviour: Strolling along the cycle track, attempting a power walk every now and again, then stopping for a sit down.

Distinctive Markings: Brand new jogging gear, spotless trainers and a Galaxy Ripple wrapper in one hand.

Natural Enemies: Skinny lycra-clad super sprinters who jog on the spot at traffic lights.

Mating Call: "It's not all about speed you know..."

Sue loves being out in the evening air, away from the kids with their noisy Xbox and endless football matches. Her evening exercise is a great time to meditate, think over her day in her head, and occasionally to catch forty winks. Those ab-crunch benches thoughtfully placed along the bay make a perfect place for a snooze. And sometimes she even dozes off in the Fiesta.

When she arrives back home she makes sure she does the 'cool-down routine' she's seen on her Davina McCall workout video. A good ten minutes of gentle stretches, accompanied by plenty of wincing and puffing normally does the trick – convincing the family she's given her hamstrings a proper hammering. Then she collapses on the couch and demands tea and biccies. After all, she deserves it.

Sue's turned evangelical about her evening exercise and keeps the rest of the office up to date with her progress. 'St Aubin's and back yesterday!' she announces proudly to the team – failing to mention that she caught the bus back to her car after a cheese toastie at the St Aubin's café.

All the enthusiasm is contagious, and she's found a weekend jogging partner – Liz from accounts. They're planning to really go for the burn on Sunday – all the way from Sue's house to St Aubins and back. If they walk fast, they might make Happy Hour at the Boathouse....

'Without Prejudice'

Dear Sir,

The light hearted story on the activities of 'Ken the Treasure Hunter', should have made me chuckle, if it wasn't for the fact that within the article was - how can I say - activities that were illegal and could encourage the uninitiated to break the law here in Jersey.

The activities of 'Ken' on the beach was fine but to carry out his hobby on the Sand Dunes is illegal, as this is a very important site for many reasons and has the status of S.S.I., and accordingly protected by law.

The hobby of metal detecting is, as your article suggests, fascinating and can sometimes be rewarding should you persevere, but if you are fortunate enough to recover artefacts of gold, silver or any precious metal whilst they are on the beach or inland, it is the finder's responsibility to notify the Police and if possible trace the owner. The finder is at best only the custodian of the artefact and has no legal right to sell the object on e-Bay.

I hope this clarifies my concerns.

Yours sincerely,

Reg Mead.

Acting President of the Jersey Metal Detecting Society.

Following last month's 'Metal Detector Man' EyeSpy article we received this letter from Reg of the Jersey Metal Detecting Society. We didn't mean to cause any offence - apologies to all you metal detecting fanatics out there if you didn't see the funny side!

TANGO! TANGO!

Tuesday 19th - Saturday 30th August

The great genius of the medium, Astor Piazzolla, is depicted as a passionate composer, an outsider who fought, connived and survived for his music. Alongside actor Patrick Lannigan are five great musicians - "Tango Volcano" and two superb dancers. The melancholy voice of the bandoneon provides the authentic sound of the tango and includes some of the great tangos from the Golden Era. Tango carries with it a sexy and sophisticated image and explodes with colour and movement that is simply irresistible.

From one island to another

This August, emerging local artist Rychèl Thérin returns to the Sir John Cheshire Gallery with a 30 piece exhibition of new photographic work. Born in New Zealand, she left as a child and has recently returned to study a Visual Arts Masters degree at Massey University, New Zealand. This recent work is a visual diary of Rychel's travels over the last six months, revisiting the places of her childhood and beyond. All of the photographs are directly linked to New Zealand and it's individualism but at the same time relate overseas to politics, conservation and identity.

'I left New Zealand when I was 11, so returning there to study has been interesting and rewarding, full of new and old experiences, places and expectations. There is a very identifiable trend of individuality in the country, people paint it onto letterboxes and cars, carve it out of trees, even signpost it!'

Gardar Thor Cortes and Dame Tiri Te Kanawa

The Gloucester Hall is set to hold a once-in-a-lifetime performance by opera sensations Dame Kiri Te Kanawa and Gardar Thor Cortes in September.

Icelandic tenor Gardar Thor Cortes has had a very successful time in the last three years, with the release of his self-titled, debut album, 'Cortes', being the fastest selling release in Iceland which also shot straight to Number One in the UK Classical Charts and staying at the top spot for three weeks. His second album recieved similarly high acclaim. He has been compared to the late Luciano Pavarotti, but remains humble of this likening, and the "James Bond of classical music" has also been named Iceland's sexiest male for two years running.

Cortes will be supporting Dame Kiri Te Kanawa, one of the most famous sopranos in the world. After her debut as the Countess in 'Le Nozze di Figaro' at the Royal Opera House, Covent Garden in 1971, her performance, in 1981 of Handel's 'Let The Bright Seraphim' at the wedding of Charles, Prince of Wales and Lady Diana Spencer was watched around the world by an estimated six hundred million people.

Te Kanawa has received a numerous amount of recognition, most notably in 1982, when she was made a Dame Commander of the British Empire. Also, she was invested with the Order of Australia in 1990 and in 1995 in the Queen's Birthday Honours List and was awarded the prestigious Order of New Zealand.

Headliners: Saturday 30th August

Main Stage

Two years on and The Zutons are back to headline the main stage at Jersey Live on Saturday 30th August. Arguably Liverpool's first great band of the 21st century, they have just released their latest album "You Can Do Anything". This follow up promises to be just as catchy as their 2004 album "Who Killed The Zutons" which had hits such as "Zuton Fever", "You Will You Won't" and "Pressure Point". The Zutons were never like other bands, their infectious songs made an instant connection with the British public, with their debut album selling over 600,000 copies in the UK alone which went on to provide them with a Nationwide Mercury Prize nomination.

Who are they?

Abi Harding -
Saxophone
David McCabe -
Vocals/Guitar
Russell Pritchard -
Bass
Sean Payne - Drums

What do they sound like?

The Zutons have an almost '60s garage rock sound but the amount of fun in the songs stop the sound venturing into retro territory. Their influences include ACDC, Frank Zappa and Jimi Hendrix.

This year the headliners of Jersey Live are bigger and better than ever. The Zutons are back to headline the first day of the festival after their successful performance in 2006 supporting Snow Patrol. Due to Pendulum pulling out of their slot headlining the dance arena on the Saturday, the Scratch Perverts have taken their place.

On the second day the biggest electro act in the UK, The Prodigy, are set to headline the main stage bringing with them a huge stage production. One of the biggest up and coming DJ acts in the UK, Kissy Sell Out, is set to blast the dance arena. Tharindu Elkin investigates:

Dance Arena

Set to replace Pendulum on Saturday are the Scratch Perverts. Their reputation as one of the world's most progressive DJ collectives is unparalleled; two consecutive World DMC Team titles, Plus One's World DMC Champion and World Vestax Champion titles, Prime Cut's back to back World ITF Scratching crowns, and countless showcases and gigs all over the world.

Who are they?

Tony Vegas
Prime Cuts
Plus One

What do they sound like?

The DJ trio have always unselfconsciously incorporated anything that feels right musically, their inspirations and influences range from The Neptunes to Red Hot Chilli Peppers. The Perverts persistently make sure that when they make an album it's not a sound-a-like production. They harness their schizophrenic influences and lofty ideals and channel their combined creativity into something very special.

still not got a ticket?!

The final batch of tickets will be on sale on 6th August at the Jersey Telecom store in King Street. This is the last time tickets for the festival will be available. Weekend Tickets are £79.50 and Single Day Tickets are £48.50. The festival takes place at the Royal Jersey Showground on Saturday 30th and Sunday 31st August.

Headliners: Saturday 30th August

Main Stage

The biggest act on the line up for Jersey Live will be bringing new material as well as their older and more popular songs. The pioneers of big beat electronic dance music are set to headline the main stage on Sunday 31st August. Their performance looks promising as they have just headlined T In The Park (Scotland) with an energetic set, including their hits "Firestarter", "Spitfire" and "Smack My Bitch Up". So far in their 18 year career they have sold over 16 million records worldwide which is unequalled in electronic music history.

Who are they?

Liam Howlett, Keith Flint & Maxim

What do they sound like?

The Prodigy style is instantly recognisable yet it incorporates various styles ranging from rave, hardcore, alternative rock and big beat. Although their sound has gradually developed over the last decade they still make sure they keep the sound of the early 1990s in their music.

Dance Arena

KISSY SELL OUT

Frequently seen blasting air horns at his gigs, Kissy promises to keep the crowd energised throughout his performances. The DJ who is also a Graphic Designer used to be a design assistant at the high-fashion magazine 'POP Magazine'. He has become well known for his eccentric electro productions and energetic DJ style.

Who is he?

Kissy (Thomas Bisdee) is a DJ/producer and graphic designer from the UK.

What does he sound like?

Radio 1 have referred to his music as 'electro rock 'n' rave and his influences are not a typical DJ's most likely choices, they range from 90s house acts to heavy metal bands. He makes his music to make the crowd go crazy, and alters the dynamics of the dancefloor by adding off beat elements to dance music that would usually not be considered by more conventional artists.

What no tents?!

This year camping is not available at the festival, which is slightly disappointing as Jersey Live is one of the only European music festivals that does not include it. It would be a great feature for the weekend and would enhance the music festival experience. You'd think the powers that be would rather have us all stay up there in Trinity at an organised campsite than head out into the night across the island huh? Plus, it would be better for our dear tourists and visitors that make the whole thing better for everyone!

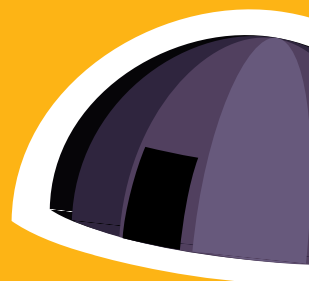

Hopefully camping will be approved for Jersey Live 2009!

Although there is no camping the festival has more to offer than music alone. There will be a Red Bull entertainment area, a Jersey Telecom giveaway, a Charity Inflatable Area and lots more! This year the organisers are encouraging people to dress up in crazy outfits as the people with the most eccentric outfits will be in with a chance to go to the backstage hospitality area! The organisers are also encouraging everyone to bring their own flags and fly them high to add to the festival atmosphere!

ssshhhhh!!

Sophie Butel has been to Africa by the looks of things and shared the memories of meeting these happy kids!

Gary Power has sent us these moody images taken at the 'Splash

Joyce Dalgarno cracked the macro lens out to snap this tiny crapaud!

This image of Val de La Mare sent in by Paracetamol Clarke is an interesting view. Surely not as interesting as Paracetamol's passport, we're intrigued to find out the history behind the name..

Michael Baginski sent in photos from St. Ouen, you don't often see sepia tones used these days - it's good to see people keeping it old skool.

Stuart Reid has taken the £100 prize this month with this La Rocco tower photo with a difference. The colour balance pleased us no end and it is almost unrecognisable as 'one of those St. Ouen's photos' - good work Stuart!

letters from london

Letters from London

After attending three major gigs in one week, visiting The British Library to view an ancient Indian manuscript, and checking out a new exhibition of paintings by Brit Chantal Joffe, our London based insider Nina Hervé still found time to catch up with Jersey born musicians Chris and Jim of Velofax to find out how much they're looking forward to a bit of Turkish Delight at Jersey Live this month.

VELOFAX

Jersey born musicians, James Bell and Chris Wackrow of Velofax moved to London to pursue their dream of making a dent in the music industry. I caught up with these musical alchemists to see how they've progressed and what their plans are for the future.

Firstly, how did you get into making music?

Chris: I was forced into it by my parents. No not really, neither of them are particularly musical, although my dad is a great pub singer and my mum introduced me to some classic albums such as Paul Simon's 'Graceland'. I got into playing guitar through my good friend Ivor when I was aged about 17. My first song was 'Dear Prudence', played on two strings, in an hour and then that night I borrowed a guitar belonging to my dear friend James 'Slow Hand' Brennan. I didn't give it back until I had mastered how to play it. But of course I'm still learning, the guitar is a versatile instrument!

Jim: I actually started playing the guitar before playing drums. I was seven years old when my mum, who happened to be looking in the JEP, generously offered to get me something from the small ads in the back of the paper. The choice was either guitar lessons or a second-hand trampoline! I chose wisely and plumped for music. I later also took up the drums at the ripe old age of ten.

In the three years since moving to london, what have been the highlights?

Chris: We've had some great gigs supporting bands we admire, Menomena being a recent and memorable one. But the greatest highlight for me is when people approach me after playing and they get what we are doing, love it and come back again ... with a friend!

Jim: The main thing has been recording our album last year in East London, getting it released and seeing it on the shelves in the shops. Plus we're continually playing gigs and have had slots at some great venues including a recent event at superclub Fabric. Playing live on air at BBC 6 Music was also a highlight earlier this year.

Has living in london influenced your writing?

Chris: Yes in the sense that the city gives a sense of freedom and sometimes chaos. I think this has an effect on my lyrics, but not as much as say 'I'm not in Love' by 10-CC.

What's inspiring you at the moment?

Chris: New stuff I like includes Studio and Black Affair. As for oldies, I'm digging Neil Young, The The, Japan and in particular Grace Jones. I'm really into the musicians that she used on her Compass Point sessions - it's a brilliant mixture of dub reggae, disco and lovely 80's soft synth sounds. Everyone should own the Grace Jones compilation 'Island Life'.

Jim: My favourite new band of the moment is MGMT. Their music sounds like cosmic 70's rock and synth-tastic 80's pop recorded in the present by a band from the future. As for older stuff, I recently got hold of a bootleg copy of Kraftwerk's third album 'Ralf and Florian', it's a pastoral kraut rock masterpiece and it's a crying shame it's not available on general release. You can find it if you know where to look in London. By the way, we're going to play tracks by some of our influences on a podcast on www.music.je that will be on-line soon.

Have you got any new material coming out soon?

Jim: We are currently working on demos of our new material. We're recording these demos ourselves using a laptop running Pro Tools. I'm fascinated by the black art of recording and producing records. It appeals to the geek in me and I'd like to get a white coat to wear whilst at work like the engineers at Abbey Road in the '60s. By the time you read this, you should be able to hear some of these new songs on our MySpace page and you can hear them when we play at Jersey Live at the end of August.

What are you looking forward to most about playing at jersey live?

Chris: The rider! The Warrens have promised us pistachio Turkish delight, lemon sorbet, and two kegs of Breda. Bless 'em! More importantly I'm looking forward to playing our new material out of a big facckkk off PA. Playing on a large stage is fun and also there is the benefit of being more than six feet away from Kevin 'houmous fingers' Pinel. I'm looking forward to it, it's gonna be soundos and proper quality and that. It's the big time blud innit...

You can catch Velofax at Jersey Live on Sunday 31st August. For more information about up-and-coming gigs and new releases check out www.myspace.com/velofax or www.velofax.com

The Ramayana

For the first time ever, more than 120 gorgeous paintings from the British Library's lavishly illustrated 17th-century Indian manuscripts are on display in a dazzling and enchanting exhibition of one of the most important literary works of ancient India, The Ramayana.

This ancient story is about Prince Rama's quest to rescue his beloved wife Sita from the clutches of King Ravana with the help of an army of monkeys headed by Sugriva. The brightly-coloured scenes are packed with incident: battle scenes with 10-headed King Ravana, the monkey kingdom of Kishkindha, white elephants and exotic flora, and finally the moment when Rama and Sita are reunited.

The exhibition explores the story of Ramayana and how it has been represented and retold over the centuries in different countries and cultures, up to and including the present day. It is still regularly performed in dance, drama and shadow puppetry all of which are taking place throughout the exhibition period as the British Library have created an exciting events programme around this timeless story.

The Ramayana is on display in Pearson Gallery, British Library until 14th September. More information can be seen at www.bl.uk entry is free.

Chantal Joffe

British artist, Chantal Joffe is well known for her expressive paintings of predominantly female figures and being drawn to the freakishly beautiful, often taking her inspiration from fashion images. Her latest body of work on display at Victoria Miro Gallery, Islington includes an eclectic group of subjects.

Joffe was recently given privileged access to personally photograph catwalk models backstage at Paris Fashion Week. She likened this to a modern day equivalent of Degas entering the world of the Royal Ballet and these images feature in her new body of large-scale painterly canvasses. Characterised by a fluid style and deliberate distortion of scale and form, these oversized paintings resonate the non-judgmental contradictions she observes in her subject matter.

Chantal Joffe's exhibition is on display at Victoria Miro, Wharf Road until 2nd August. More information can be found at: www.victoria-miro.com

Branchage

Only two months to go and announcements have now be made about some of the special events that are happening during Branchage Jersey International Film Festival taking place on the island in September.

To kick off the festival, guest illustrators Le Gun will be hosting an exhibition lasting for the week of the festival entitled 'Crime & Punishment'. This will be taking place in the disused cells at the Old Magistrate's Court where each lock up will be transformed into an artistic display depicting the escapades of real life and imaginary petty crooks and villains. It will feature a real life double agent, fruity sailor prison loves and a possessed Irish ventriloquist.

Another event sees the dungeons of Mont Orgueil castle as the backdrop for a screening of cult British horror film The Wickerman. This isn't just an any old screening as it will be introduced by film score expert and founder of Trunk records Jonny Trunk, who will be hosting a talk on British cult soundtracks before the screening which will also feature a live score by folk super group The Memory Band.

'La Bordeé d'Branchage' will have a Burlesque Cabaret theme running through it making the magnificent Spiegel Tent the ideal venue for the Saturday night festival party. Headlining will be the exciting, new Epic records act Paloma Faith along with full backing band. Paloma will provide glamour, stunning costumes and improvised theatrics to her heart-felt, Billie Holiday influenced songs with support from female performance and DJ duo The Broken Hearts. The Broken Hearts provide a spectacular experience for the ears and eyes drawing inspiration from the golden age of Hollywood and circus slideshows when choosing their identical costumes.

Skaters take note too. A screening of Rollin' Through The Decades will be taking place on Sunday at Jersey Arts Centre. The documentary made by filmmaker Winstan Whitter, encapsulates the positive atmosphere of skateboarding, showing a true picture of its influence on our time. Rare and unseen footage features throughout with nostalgic sounds of the 80's and 90's as the soundtrack. Winstan will also be answering questions on the film alongside the UK's leading skateboarder Pete King. Pete along with Winstan Whitter will be over to judge the skate shorts as part of the Islanders Film Awards.

Gig Diary

Tuesday 24th June – Radiohead, Victoria Park, Hackney

From the second that Thom Yorke and co strolled on to the enormous cage-like stage, lit by a myriad of technicolour tubular lights suspended from above, the 40,000 capacity crowd were hypnotised. Kicking off with an epic 15 steps, the first half of the set focused on their magnificent latest album In Rainbows. The set dipped into all of their musical phases, with hits from their early guitar-rock days such as Just from The Bends and Ok Computer's Airbag, continuing with Idioteque from Kid A which reached an atmospheric pinnacle enhanced by Yorke's arms flailing madly in time with the beat like a man possessed.

EMO

ONE OF THE MOST CONTROVERSIAL MUSIC GENRES THAT HAS DEVELOPED INTO A TEENAGE CULT. IS IT A MISUNDERSTOOD MUSIC SECT OR AN OVERRATED GENRE? THARINDU ELKIN INVESTIGATES...

Technically "Emo" is a term for a counter culture that has derived from the genre of "Emocore". "Emocore" is a musical hybrid of the hardcore and punk genres, however "Emocore" incorporates an emotional edge to these particular styles. Pretty complicated... The genre was recently attacked by the Daily Mail as it was referred to as a "suicide cult" and blamed it for the suicide of a 13 year old girl in Kent, this triggered a protest that saw fans of emo marching from Hyde Park to the papers' offices.

Who are Emos?

Emos are the people that listen to the "Emocore" genre and follow the culture. They are often stereotyped by many people including the media as being suicidal, depressed and associated with self-harm. They are also associated with their particular fashion, this consists of band T shirts, tight jeans and a hair style with a long straight fringe brushed to the side. They can easily be identified by their black clothing and sometimes excessive amounts of black makeup.

Why is Emo so controversial?

Due to the different fashion that is worn by Emos, many people, particularly the younger generation, perceive them as being homosexual. This is another stereotype that has given the culture a bad name. The older generation has started to complain because of the ways in which emos express their emotion. The culture has been falsely linked with self harm and suicide due to the lyrical content of some emo songs. Although the culture is constantly attacked by the media, emos defend themselves because they believe that the culture is not linked with suicide or self-harm.

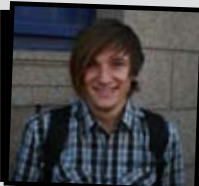

EMOS AREN'T ALL THAT BAD, WE ASKED SOME ISLANDERS THEIR VIEWS...

I wouldn't wear the clothes it's not individual, the style is the same. I don't really like the music, I'm more into indie.
Stephanie Robinson, 17

We don't like the clothing as it's too dark and black isn't in the rainbow! The music is good, we like Panic At The Disco.
Robyn Baker and Joelle Agathangelou
Both 14 and Students

I like the music a lot but I think the stereotype is unfair. It's dirty.
Adam Bouteloup, 16
Student

It's sound, let them be who they want to be and it's important to have a variety in music.
Aaron White, 21
SDS Sales Assistant

My brother listens to it, but it's not really my type. I find the music quite saddening to listen to.
Will Hunter, 18

COMEDY SHOWDOWN

Two genre defining comedians are back on the screens this summer after some time in the wilderness.

YOU DON'T MESS WITH THE ZOHAN

DIRECTED BY: DENNIS DUGAN

STARRING: ADAM SANDLER, JOHN TURTURRO, EMMANUELLE CHRIQUI

RELEASE DATE: 15/08/2008

Zohan Dvir's dream is to become a New York hairstylist – the only problem is that he is actually an Israeli counter-terrorism army commando. However, Zohan's latest mission turns out to be a blessing in disguise; when he is instructed to recapture Palestinian terrorist, the "Phantom" (John Turturro), he seizes the opportunity to escape.

Faking his own death, Zohan tricks the Phantom into believing that he has killed him. Instead, Zohan smuggles himself onto a New York City flight by hiding in one of the pet crates. On the journey, he befriends (and gives new hairdos to) a pair of dogs named Scrappy and Coco. Upon arrival in the Big Apple, Zohan reinvents himself as an Australian with a dodgy accent, going by the alias of Scrappy Coco (original). Wasting no time, Zohan bulldozes his way through a series of disastrous salon interviews, before eventually secures a job in the run-down salon of a Palestinian woman – but only after satisfying an older client with a good haircut and even better "back-room special services". "Scrappy's" reputation soon exceeds him and the (mature) ladies are practically queuing around the block for a piece of the action. However, some things are too good to be true. Against all odds, the Phantom has also relocated to NYC and is now a thriving fast food chain owner - and he has been tipped off by a Palestinian cab driver on Zohan's undercover activities.

Zohan is horrified to discover that the evil Phantom is hot on his tail and has some pretty sick tricks up his sleeve; giving up the exhilarating existence of Scrappy Coco may be the only way to save his own life.

THE LOVE GURU

DIRECTED BY: MARCO SCHNABEL

STARRING: MIKE MYERS, JESSICA ALBA, JUSTIN TIMBERLAKE

RELEASE DATE: 01/08/2008

Pitka is an American who, after being abandoned in India as a child, was raised and brought up by gurus. After years of being taught the values and knowledge of self-help and soul-cleansing, Pitka decided to return to the US, armed with nothing but experience and wisdom.

In the hope of gaining fame and getting-rich-quick, he aims to conquer the profession of spiritual therapy. Pitka's eccentric approach soon gets him noticed and lands him his first challenge; salvaging the marriage of Toronto Maple Leafs star hockey player, Darren Roanoke. The ice-hockey player's wife, Prudence (Meagan Good), has left him for Jacques "Le Coq" Grande (Justin Timberlake), who happens to play for rival team L.A. Kings.

Roanoke doesn't take the blow very easily and as a result of the trauma, develops shaky-hand-syndrome. With the Stanley Cup looming and a 40 year old "Bullard Curse" to break, the Toronto Maple Leafs can't afford to lose one of their top players.

Alarmed by the effect The Hand will have on Roanoke's performance, the team's owner Jane Bullard (Jessica Alba) and Coach Cherkov (Verne Troyer) are desperate for a solution; cue Pitka.

Pitka's simple duty to restore Roanoke and his wife to marital bliss could, if a success, make him a legend in the world of famous self-help gurus and also, a hero of American sport. Double whammy.

The flight to quality

D M Wooster

With credit markets crunching, it may be worth asking in which direction Brand Jersey should be headed.

We must, after all, cement the Island's status as destination of choice for the discerning traveller.

What would Great Uncle Bertie have said?

The answer was simple. Staring me in the face.

Some designer labels and a nice cup of tea.

A retail village to die for.

Bicester. Unprepossessing, slightly tired, much less good-looking than her nearby Cotswold sisters.

Add a designer retail village and some Agent Provocateur eau de parfum. Result? Hundreds of thousands of people flock in from across the British Isles and, with the help of that Stelios chap and his successors, from parts of the Continent I'm afraid I can't even begin to spell.

Stay with me.

Jersey. Beautiful scenery. Clean beaches. Fantastic sunshine stats. Add a designer retail village and some Agent Provocateur eau de parfum (or some lovely smelly stuff from up at La Mare). Result? You fill in the blanks, dear boy.

Doing the math, as our cousins across the pond might put it, the tax saving should more than cancel out the shipping costs. Prada handbags and Versace trinkets are surprisingly light, or so I'm told.

Award winning tea rooms.

I'm not talking about somewhere which has broken the mould by managing to write cappuccino with two p's and two c's or which views its willingness to accept credit cards as irrefutable proof as to its customer focus.

I'm talking about something that knocks the pinafores off Betty's of Harrogate and gives the clotted cream of Newton Poppleford a run for its lolly.

I'm talking about full silver service, somewhere which has heard of 12 or 18 types of leaf tea. Not three.

You smile politely. No-one in Jersey will pay north of £4 for a cuppa, you say in hushed tones. And I say, test it. Go to the Dorchester, the Ritz, the Savoy (fine, its closed at the moment, just peer through the windows), Brown's, even the Wolseley. Nobody there is carping about shelling out £20, £30, or even £40 per head for a scrumptious, no-holes-barred, no limits on the teacakes, Jeeves-eat-your-heart out full afternoon tea.

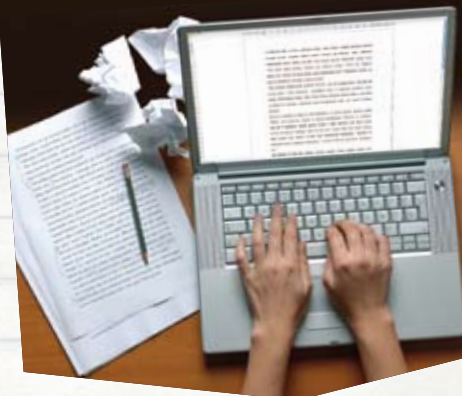

When you have a world-class offering, price sensitivity goes out the sash window. The market is there, trust me. Someone just needs to tap it.

To borrow the fateful turn of phrase from this year's winner of The Apprentice- That's what I'm talking about.

Creamtease

Vintage clothes: A glamorised way of describing clothes from a different era and 2nd hand items. With the help of celebrity interest and increased levels of online shopping it has been boosted into the mainstream.

With a market swamped by cheap mass produced clothing today, vintage is a fashion forward for those environmentally conscious dressers wanting to spend less money on something interesting and individual to wear.

Raking through the rails at flea markets and in Charity shops is nothing to be ashamed of, in fact it creates a huge sense of achievement when you find an extremely cheap pair of designer vintage shoes in Oxfam and you know the proceeds are going towards a worthwhile cause. Often, charity shops in the most affluent areas can hold the best vintage finds, it's where all the rich people dispose of their unworn designer goods; Jersey is a prime example.

Some pieces are becoming more difficult to find, and more expensive to procure, but be careful when buying vintage, there is a fine line between looking like your gran and Sarah Jessica Parker. Think of chic icons when styling yourself a la vintage and mix the old with new pieces from your wardrobe. Vintage clothes may not be everyone's cup of tea, and not many people want to wear 5th hand shoes, but almost every design you find in the shops today has been inspired by pieces from the past, so it may be worth tackling your fear of worn in clothes.

You don't need to travel to London or New York to search for vintage finds, Jersey boasts a large amount of charity shops for vintage clothing and designer clothes. Jersey Hospice Care are presenting their own marquee at Jersey Live this year to raise money for their charity with the help of a team of enthusiastic volunteers and support from local business. The only way to enter the garden tea party themed tent 'Cream Tease' will be through a dressing room where the public must purchase clothing and accessories to wear. Only by participating will you be able to enjoy the tent's exclusive entertainment from music by local DJ's, Bands, private bar and games.

All the items you see photographed here were found at Jersey Hospice shops and will be available to buy at Jersey Live on the weekend of Saturday 30th and Sunday 31st August from 'Cream Tease', with all proceeds going towards Jersey Hospice Care. It's a great excuse to dress up in some fancy attire without feeling self-conscious - everyone will be doing it!

Tips_

Don't buy anything with dubious looking marks

Look out for moth holes

Try everything on - more often than not you can't return vintage goods and with varying international sizing, the change in women's shapes and alteration make size labels next to useless

Dare to be different - you may even start a trend

Fashion always seems to have its way of returning. '70s flares are overtaking the skinnies and everyone seems to be wearing Wayfarers and aviators from the 80's again. Amy Winehouse has even miraculously brought back the beehive. But how have the trends of time gone by influenced what we wear today?

The '60s

Clothes of this time were made to show off women's bodies. Skinny jeans, mini skirts, baby doll dresses, flat boots, shift dresses and tie-dye prints were all the rage

The '70s

Disco fever spread the nation! If you weren't wearing bell bottoms, hot pants, ra-ra skirts, tube tops, halter tops or one shoulder dresses, chances are you lived under a rock!

The '80s

The feminine look returned with a masculine twist - in the form of shoulder pads, worn under everything. And suits. Some women even took to wearing ties! The masculine twist accessorised everything from one-shoulder, untucked shirts cinched in with a large belt to leg warmers and acid-washed jeans

The '90s

The look in the '90s was far more casual than anything seen before. Stone washed denim overalls, flannel shirts, basic black wardrobe and Doc Martens were everyday wear. And, of course, the "Rachel" haircut was everywhere

And the 2000s?

Well, fashion this side of the Millennium seems to be a mix of every trend that has come and gone. We've experienced the '80s revival recently with the "Choose Life" and "Frankie Says Relax" slogan t-shirts. '70s flares are starting to creep back in along with baby doll dresses. However, there's just something about a classic style that seems to endure change, fads and fancies. The little 'black number' is an example of a must have as well as the stiletto that has had timeless appeal

Fools' Gold

Stephen Webster has been designing and creating contemporary accessories for just over 30 years. He's become a favourite among many celebrities such as Jay-Z, Madonna, Kate Moss, Sienna Miller, and Christina Aguilera - the face of his new campaign.

Having brought bold and colourful gemstones back to the West End, 'the ultimate diamond geezer' tells Claire Campbell about his inspiration, extravagance and some fashion faux pas.

Stephen, your jewellery designs have a glamorous rock and roll feel, is there anything else that inspires you?

Over the past few years I feel in a position where my life, my likes and my interests have become so entwined with my work that I can genuinely say a client is buying into a piece of Stephen Webster. A lot of my musical heroes have become clients and friends. My home, much to my family's exasperation is full of stuffed animals, skulls and exotic bugs. I have been lucky enough to be asked to customise a Harley Davidson and a Gibson Les Paul guitar. As well as my day job I am a columnist for Russian Rolling Stone magazine. As you can see I have a few influences.

I believe you have many celebrity fans that you design for, but are you a fan of anyone at the moment?

I like to think that I am open to all kinds of music. As well as all my old favourites Bowie, Roxy music, The Clash etc, I am currently listening to The Kills, The Raconteurs and The Ting Tings.

You have been designing for over 30 years, have you got any fashion disasters you can tell us about?

All my fashion disasters have been about my clothes rather than my designing. I lived in Canada for three years which is where I hit a particular low point. I refuse to talk about it even to this day. But my brother said at the time "how could a young guy with a reasonable sense of style lose it so completely in such a short time".

If you weren't designing jewellery, what would you be doing?

If I wasn't designing jewellery I would spend more time managing my band The Rotten Hill Gang.

“If diamonds are your best friends girls, you really should get out more”

What is the most extravagant piece you have ever designed?

The most extravagant piece I have designed is not about the mere price but more about the audacity of it all. An 80 year old Californian who had been advised by her doctor to quit smoking commissioned me to make an exact replica cigarette in 18ct gold and enamel. I used fire opal as the business end and a piece of mammoth bone as the filter. She could always be found on a bike machine at her gym complete with personal trainer and the placebo in a long cigarette holder until the day she passed over to the great ashtray in the sky.

Are diamonds really a girls best friend?

If diamonds are your best friends girls you really should get out more - diamonds are lovely but oranges are not the only fruit.

Having played a part in making jewellery fashionable and wearable for men, where do you see the direction of the jewellery world heading in the near future?

The trend for men's jewellery has acquired so much momentum that the only way forward is for it to get more and more creative and interesting. The stigma now gone, it's about individualising ones self by choosing pieces that will provoke comment and therefore make the wearer feel good about their decisions.

And finally, is all that glitters gold?

All that glitters is not gold. Some of it is fools gold as we well know. Also, not all gold glitters.

Après Sun

A little bit of tanning is a good thing, yet so many articles published now scare-monger us into feeling guilty for sunbathing. As long as you are sensible and try to prevent burning, the odd spot of sun worshipping is absolutely fine! After sunbathing remember to apply one of these soothing and tan-enhancing creams to keep your summer honey-bronzed skin in tip top condition.

Clinique After Sun Balm with Aloe - £11.50

This is a great after sun which instantly cools and refreshes skin after being out in the sun. It's non greasy, easy to apply and moisturizes dry skin brilliantly.

Spiezia 100% Organic After Sun Oil - £19

This lavender scented after sun gently soothes and nourishes sun parched skin and also calms redness and soreness. Although slightly greasy when first applied, it works with your skin to lock in moisture.

Lancaster Tan Maximizer After Sun - £17.45

It smells fantastic, immediately cools and rehydrates your skin and helps prolong your tan! It might be a little pricey, but it's definitely worth it.

Thalgo Sun Repair Cream Mask face - £18.50

This calms and compensates for daily excessive sun exposure. Enriched with micro-algae from the Pacific to retain and prolong your tan, your skin is ready for exposure the following day!

Clarins SOS Sunburn Soother - £19.30

Made with mango and shea butter, this helps skin to recover quicker from sunburn and reduces the risk of peeling. It's easy to apply, soothes hot skin and minimizes redness.

Dermalogica After Sun Repair - £22.40

Recommended for all skin conditions, this after sun helps restore damaged skin while also protecting from further damage.

Matis After Sun Soothing Milk - £17.50

This light, silky after sun uses mango butter for nutrition and water lily flowers for optimum soothing, creating a cooling effect when applied. It's great for enhancing and prolonging a natural looking tan.

Carita Pro Lifting facial

1 session approx 90min

The Carita Pro Lifting facial promises an instant face-lifting effect using massage, plant-based skincare products and electric currents. As an anti-ageing facial, it's reputed to be among the best. But can you really get these sort of results from a facial?

For those of you who haven't yet visited Experience, they can be found in Hue Street (just down from the Post Horn Pub). On arrival at the salon you will immediately be greeted by friendly staff and a soothing smell of scented candles. I was shown to my treatment room, and the therapist explained the different stages of the facial and discussed my particular problem areas. This facial can be tailored to fit all skin types, regardless of age.

After a gentle re-alignment of my body the treatment began. First, my face was cleansed deeply and then exfoliated using a gorgeous smelling mixture of sunflower seeds, thyme and cloves. Then came the 'magic currents', from the Pro-lifting machine. Two electrodes covered in sponges are moved over the face to soften and remove all the dead skin build up. The sensation is slightly tingly but I felt completely relaxed and was just imagining the glowing complexion soon to be revealed.

Next I enjoyed a contouring revitalising eye mask and a mouth mask which promised to plump up my lips and smooth away fine lines. While this was working my therapist gave me a relaxing hand and a foot massage. I hadn't really been expecting feet to be involved as part of a facial, so make sure your pinkies are in perfect order!

Next a luxurious full facial massage using a wonderfully soft prolifting serum, firming cream and a biological mask - all ingredients which guarantee to repair the effects of time and restore a youthful radiance. The 'magic currents' are used again, this time to lift the skin, erasing fine lines and wrinkles and redefining the contours of your face. All this in 90 relaxing minutes.

The finishing touch was Carita's Perfect Cream. It felt luxurious and smelt divine, a perfect end to the best facial I have ever had. This facial really does live up to its claims - my skin was definitely tighter, lifted, and the dark shadows under my eyes had disappeared. My complexion glowed like it hadn't done for months. It felt like nothing short of a miracle.

“Zara resolves to be a better person... from the inside out – with the help of the new Ayurvedic-inspired cuisine from Saffrons.”

Restaurant Review – Saffrons

Spice it up

We've been shortchanged by curry houses. Decades of gloopy oversweetened westernized curries may have sent chicken tikka masala rocketing to the top of the 'favourite British dish' list, but it's come at a price. We've missed out on real Eastern cooking.

Saffrons, the new restaurant at the Hotel de France aims to change all that. Linked closely to the hotel's Ayurvedic spa, the restaurant mixes the Ayurvedic philosophy of balance in all things together with the best local produce, and comes up with a menu that's quite frankly, sublime. The descriptions are mouth watering, the dishes have depth and complexity, and the ingredients are the best. Quality local products like hand-dived scallops, line-caught sea bass and seasonal local vegetables come straight to your plate via the spice route. Chef Bobby Geetha became an expert in spa wellness cuisine at the luxury spa resort Taj Green Cove in Kerala, and brings the same approach to Saffrons, presenting food simply using fresh spices rather than slathering on the cream and butter. The result – lighter and healthier dishes, but still with the intense flavours that make Indian cooking so unique. All the taste but none of the cholesterol.

Ayurvedic philosophy says we're all a different combination of three doshas – or personality types – pitta, kapha and vata. When our doshas are out of balance – our health suffers, so Ayurveda is all about getting us balanced again. Many of the spices traditionally used in Eastern cooking – turmeric, cardamom, and cumin to name just a few – are also medicinal, and according to Ayurveda, blends of these spices can help get our doshas back to normal. Becoming a better person from the inside out sounds perfect to me – especially if it involves eating plenty of delicious food. I took Scarlett, my Ayurvedic expert friend, with me to Saffrons to try the tasting menu. She's such an expert, she claims to be able to tell by a single handshake what dosha you are – according to her, kaphas feel clammy, pittas' hands are hot and sweaty and vatas are cool to the touch. I'm so glad she told me I was a vata....

We started with a vegetable and paneer kebab – paneer is a South Asian cheese – with a garlic rasam and mint chutney. Properly vegetarian, this beautiful dish pairs the sharp and salty paneer with soft tomato rasam. 'It's gorgeous – like a Bloody Mary with a kick' quipped Scarlett. After a palate cleansing lemon and lime sherbert, we tried the curry leaf scallops. Each scallop was perfectly cooked and perched on a soft coconut and rice blini. It's spicy, but with a gentle warming heat and an almost healing feel to it. I loved it. 'Of course you do', explained Scarlett, 'You vatas are all the same, all airy-fairy, you just need a bit of warming up'.

The main courses were the local sea bass and a pepper roasted lamb fillet. Seduced by the starters, we couldn't wait to see what treats we'd get for the main course. The sea bass was delicate and delicious, served with foam topped tomatoes, pickled baby artichokes and gorgeous al dente wild asparagus, and it tasted amazing thanks to the aromatic fennel. But our favourite was the lamb. Absolutely beautifully presented, this was a sumptuous dish – rich and melt-in-the-mouth, the lamb came with a deep plummy meat jus and a delicately scented mix of broad beans, chickpeas and crunchy almonds. Alongside was a witty Jersey take on sag aloo with discs of Jersey Royals sandwiched with spinach leaves. It was an incredible mix of tastes and flavours – it's been a long time since I've had a dish that good.

We were lucky enough to try a platter of mini desserts, and I would run out of space – and superlatives if I tried to tell you about them. Divine, decadent and beautifully detailed, every one was imaginative, inventive and absolutely amazing. The pomegranate and saffron espuma left Scarlett speechless for once, and the mini pear and truffle fondant... well, it was just incredible. We finished with a proper masala chai – authentic Indian spiced sweet tea – and a world away from a Starbucks chai latte. Restorative and healing, it was just like Mummi-jji would make.

Saffrons' prices may seem on the high side, but that's only because we've got used to 'bargain-basement' Eastern cooking. Mixing the best local produce with individually blended unique spice flavours isn't a cheap option – and it may not suit everyone. It's not 'meat and two veg' and it's definitely not your bog-standard Indian takeaway fare. But for a modern, fresh approach to real Eastern cooking – perfectly balanced in flavour and presentation, Saffrons is hard to beat.

Jersey Lavender Farm

The Jersey Lavender Farm is often viewed solely as a tourist attraction, or somewhere for the 'blue rinse brigade'. However, in reality it is actually a secret hot-spot for yummy mummies and in-the-know locals who head there for the terrific breakfasts amongst other delights.

If you've got a spare hour or two this summer then head up there; it is free to get in, and it's the perfect place to pop for lunch or afternoon tea. It is also a safe place for kids to run around and they can feed the hens and play on the tree swings.

Once you have explored the well-maintained gardens and lavender fields you can go to the brilliant café which uses fresh local produce and don't forget to visit the gift shop which sells great unusual presents.

the world's fastest Indian

Vicky Fawcett

If you thought Indian cooking was all a post-pub bajis and baltis, washed down with plenty of pints, then think again. Global chef, Vineet Bhatia is blazing a trail to establish Indian cuisine up there with the best in the world. It's paying off. He was the first ever Indian chef awarded a Michelin star by those fastidious French.

Vineet owns the heavenly civilised Rasoi Restaurant in Chelsea, where he got his second star. He founded Urban Turban, a funky Notting Hill eatery that delivers delicious delicacies, based on street food from Bombay, spiced up with a cool mix of Bollywood. He has other Rasoi Restaurants in Mauritius and Geneva and has opened up in Dubai and Moscow, Saudi and Leeds faster than you can say Gordon Ramsay. Now Vineet is having talks with local businesses about opening a restaurant here, which would be quite a coup for Castle Quay.

On a recent visit to Jersey, Vineet was excited by the wealth and quality of local produce from the lobster to the asparagus, herbs, peppers and chilis. Everything he needs to adapt his signature dish of half a lobster roasted in ginger, and dusted with a cloud of curry, spices and cocoa powder. Exotic wonders described foodie Karma Sutra. So if you are looking to broaden your culinary horizons of the sub-continent, watch this space.

Winners: Menu de Terroir 2008

The battle of the summer menus has reached its conclusion with Ad-Lib winning Genuine Jersey's coveted accolade. Twenty six venues, judged by a secret panel of restaurateurs, chefs and food critics, competed to see who could create the best menu using at least 80% seasonal Jersey produce. Ad-Lib's menu featured carpaccio of Jersey beef with homemade biltong, pavé of turbot and organic rhubarb crumble, giving them one of the highest-ever recorded scores. Sandra Dalziel - previously of the Village Bistro - and Dean Morgenthal have been working closely with Vermont Farm to source the best local, organic produce and will continue to feature seasonal specials throughout the year. Previous winners were still delivering quality with the Best Hotel category won by the Atlantic, Castle Green won Best Pub and the Gardener's Tearoom Best Café.

TWO GLUGS & A SPLASH Danny Moisan

#1 Coffee

Well known in Jersey circles, Danny Moisan is a chef who knows his mind. This month we kick off the first of our series of 'Dannys Rants'. Apparently he doesn't like to take any prisoners so watch out!

The eternal search for a decent cup of coffee on my day off seems to always end in disappointment! So here goes, my attempt to teach you how I make the perfect coffee and why 99% of cafes in Jersey manage to cock it up!

I buy my coffee beans from "Cooper's coffee merchant" why? Well to tell you the truth, I was lucky enough to be invited recently by David Warr to look round his coffee house. I was in awe of his enthusiasm and pure love for coffee.

As much as I love food, David's love for his product shines through and the end product is perfect. I use a Bourbon Dark Roast espresso bean, briefly and without wishing to give too many of David's secrets away, a fine blend of Honduras, Ethiopian, Colombian and Indonesian beans all adding their own distinctive element to the perfect blend (Java Semeru, Excelso and SHB.) They are all roasted for 17 minutes at 224c and then fast chilled and delivered to my café.

It is at this point I believe that most people get it wrong! You have to love coffee to make the perfect cup. I keep my beans refrigerated until I need them, only grinding a small amount at a time. My machine is de-scaled daily and the water supply runs through a purifier system. If you take sugar with your coffee only use dark Moscovado soft rich sugar that enhances the coffee flavour and adds a slight molasses taste. Always serve the coffee in a hot cup and preferably cleanse the pallet with still water just before tasting the coffee.

It's as simple as that! So why do I dread my day off so much? Most coffee houses I visit cut corners, either purchasing cheaper coffee beans or not treating the product with the care and attention it deserves or simply not loving coffee enough to treat it right and give their customer the best it can be.

I'm sure that there are a few places serving really good coffee and I hope to find them soon otherwise I may just have to work on my day off.

That ends my little rant for this week; I will be having a go at fish suppliers next week so keep your eye out for my weekly rant on food related issues.

Juicy Mussels

Those sweet little gems from the sea just got sweeter. Now is the time that the Jersey Oyster Company are harvesting their Bouchot Mussels. Named after the traditional Brittany method of growing on wooden poles, the mussels are filtered by the clean Jersey tides of Grouville Bay. Deliciously sweet, juicy and grit free, the Bouchot are very much in demand from now until the end of the year. The old adage about only eating shellfish when there is an "r" in the month, was painfully true in the days before fridges. Due to local demand from wise islanders and discerning restaurants, Steve Luce and Chris Le Masurier are increasing their annual production to 150 tonnes. They only supply the local market - the best restaurants and all the Island's fish merchants - delivering, fresh, six days a week. With a minimum of food miles, almost zero packaging and absolutely nothing added, they are food at it's simplest and freshest. Get down to the Fish Market and get stuck in.

How to cook....

Moules Marinere

The most delicious, classic feast that is fresh, clean, super cheap and easier than you think to prepare.

ingredients

500g mussels per person
1 garlic clove, finely chopped
1 or 2 shallots, finely chopped
Knob of butter
Parsley and thyme leaves, picked and coarsely chopped
Half a glass of dry white wine
120ml double cream
Crusty bread to serve

directions

1. Wash the mussels under cold, running water. Bin any open ones that won't close when tapped against the sink. Pull out any fibrous beards, protruding from the tightly closed shells.

2. Soften the garlic and shallots in the butter with a handful of picked herbs - parsley, thyme - in a pan big enough to take all the mussels and be only be half full.

1. Add the mussels and wine, turn up the heat, then cover and steam them open in their own juices for 3-4 minutes. Give the pan a good shake every now and then.

2. Remove the cooked mussels into a dish and keep warm. Add the cream to the liquid and boil rapidly for 5 mins to reduce.

3. Spoon the moules into four large warmed bowls, ladle over the sauce, sprinkle with parsley and serve with lots of crusty bread for soaking up the creamy juices.

4. Get stuck in. Enjoy with a nice glass or two of something dry, white and chilled.

a truly different dining experience...

The Concept

The foundation of our cooking is based on sourcing quality local products. By utilizing such products as hand dived scallops, line caught sea bass and local vegetables, we are having products at their best quality at the right season and reducing food miles which affects the quality of the product as well as the environment.

The Technique

The cooking methods are inspired from different regions of India; seafood recipes from Goa to richer dishes from Punjabi in the north. We utilize a clay oven, called Tandoor, to retain the authenticity of such dishes as Naan bread and all Tandoories.

Modern European techniques such as slow cooking, low temperature and sous-vide are used to perfect the blend of spices and quality of the product.

The Presentation

The dishes are presented simply in a modern European way, letting the food "do-the-talking" rather than masking the food in heavy garnishes and sauces. The essence is to retain the intensity of the flavours but allow for lighter and healthier dishes.

Call 614450 for a dining experience with a difference.

Eat Out Magazine names Bohemia Bar & Restaurant 26th best restaurant in the UK

Bohemia Bar & Restaurant is delighted to have been named the 26th best restaurant in the UK in Eat Out Magazine's top 100 restaurants list, ahead of both Gordon Ramsay at Claridges and L'Atelier de Joel Robuchon.

The list is compiled through rigorous research, scouring the internet, restaurant guides, regional and local papers, trade publications and awards bodies for an ultimate top 100 list. Restaurants are given one point for every accolade received in 2007/8, including Michelin stars. Bohemia Bar & Restaurant was the only Jersey restaurant to make the list.

The accreditation adds to Bohemia's already impressive record of recognition. In January, the talented and dedicated team celebrated news that they had retained a Michelin star for the fourth year running, and in 2005, the restaurant was named as one of the Top 25 UK Restaurants in Egon Ronay's RAC Guide.

the chef's table at Bohemia. We get hungry just looking at it.

"To have Bohemia listed as one of the top restaurants in the UK again is a fantastic honour, especially by a leading industry magazine such as Eat Out", says Lawrence Huggler, owner and Managing Director of the Club Hotel & Spa.

"To receive this accolade shortly after opening our stunning new Chefs Table, where customers get the chance to see what makes Bohemia so special, as well as our three new private dining rooms, makes it all the more rewarding" how do you like them apples?

Is it a cider? Is it a sparkling wine? Close, it's Pompette.

Introduced at the West Show only a few weeks ago and a must for fans of cider and sparkling wines or champagnes alike, La Mare Vineyard have let their latest trick from their innovative sleeves.

Keen to further the breadth of Genuine Jersey products and desperate to do their Jersey apples justice, the geniuses at La Mare have changed the way that they have produced cider since 1980 and enhanced their range by creating a cider that is fine as a champagne and as such is to be enjoyed in a flute. But it isn't merely the presentation that is resplendent of a champagne.

Truly unexpectedly, the first thing that you notice upon tasting are the bubbles. Hundreds of tiny bubbles that instantly make you think of champagne before leading into much of the cider taste that you'd expect yet so delicate and light. At 7% it's got a bit of a kick to it but as much as the final taste somewhat reminded me of one, this is no French farm cider. The secret is in the production.

Once picked, the apples are fed into a hopper, graded and shredded before passing through a fine mesh and series of rollers and being pumped into variable volume chambers that ensure that only the liquid is stored and allows no unnecessary air into the equation. What remains of the apples is ideal for composting.

As the brewing process continues, the necessary yeasts and other ingredients are added before the cider is bottled, capped and stored on its side. This allows any sediment to settle before the bottle inverted and left neck down so that the sediment is deposited at the 'top' of the bottle. Much like a champagne, the bottles are turned periodically before, and here's the clever bit, the neck end of each bottle is inserted into a chilling device which freezes the top inch or so of the bottle so that when inserted into a clever machine that 'pops' the bottle, the frozen liquid containing the unwanted sediment shoots out leaving just the best bits.

What remains in the bottle is then topped up and given a 'dosage' of around 10ml sugar and brandy solution before a cork is inserted and the bottles make their way to the shop. The whole process takes months and the final result is well worth all of the care and effort that has gone into creating what is an ideal alternative to sparkling wines and a perfect excuse for an afternoon drink in the sunshine. At only £8.95 a bottle there's no excuse not to either - bottoms up!

room with a view

When it came time for their elderly neighbours to move out of the flat below them, Gina and Harry Carey were offered first refusal on the purchase. They saw the potential to transform the property back to a substantial family home and set about creating a perfect beach front dwelling.

With a beach front location, the canvas was perfect and with some hard work the two flats were combined and transformed back in to the original house. In 2005, the whole interior of the house was renovated.

A maze of rooms downstairs were done away with and the structure of the main living area has now become an open plan kitchen, dining and lounge area, tied together by a central feature chimney breast. The open plan area downstairs affords beautiful views across St Aubins bay and the garden gives direct access onto the promenade and beach.

As part of the process the house was completely stripped and everything inside was replaced, from the wiring to plumbing and oil fired central heating.

The newly created property now has 4 bedrooms, 3 bathrooms and a unique looking detached garage with two rooms above, which many years ago was used as a summer let. There is also parking for three cars at the front of the property.

Although the front of the house had originally been on the road side, the proximity to the cycle track and beach has meant that many homes along the section of beach now treat the rear of their properties as their focus.

Gina and Harry's neighbours inform us that German troops were billeted in the property during the occupation and doorways connected the property to three adjoining houses!

The location at Beaumont is superb. Positioned a stone's throw from the Gunsight cafe, you are only a short distance from town with regular bus routes almost on your door step. In addition there is a Co-op store just around the corner, two pubs and the Bistro Soleil in close proximity. St Aubin is just a fifteen minute walk away.

You may wonder why the property is on the market and how anyone could want to leave such a great area. Gina seems to agree but with a young daughter, the couple dream of a huge garden and have never really felt they needed a sea front location.

The property has a great deal of further potential for development for it's new owners, the garden, currently paved, is ample and the unique outbuilding has a great deal of charm and could be redeveloped for a number of purposes.

the brief

A buying guide for 'J cats'

As an essential employee, buying a house is no simple matter as you must form a company specifically to buy the property.

The downsides (let's get them out of the way first):

The company can be jointly owned by the essential employee and their spouse but the spouse cannot live there on their own. If the 'J category' employee dies, the spouse has to move out and sell up. Both will need to leave should the essential employee lose the 'J Category' status. Remember, by jointly owning the company, the spouse is protected financially but doesn't gain residential rights.

Check your status:

Your employer must check with the Housing Minister that you qualify for 'J category' status. After confirmation, instruct your lawyer to begin the buying process.

Next, reserve a company name with the Jersey Financial Services Commission (JFSC) and inform the estate agent and mortgage provider that it is to be a 'J Category' purchase, advising them of the company name.

The Housing Minister will need an undertaking that there will be no change in the ownership of the company shares without the Minister's consent (unless it is to sell to another J Category) and that the property will be sold out of the company when necessary or transferred into the name of the essential employee once full housing qualification is achieved.

Don't forget the mortgage:

There are two ways this is normally arranged for 'J cats'. The most popular method is for the lender to loan directly to the essential employee and spouse, whilst the company gives a guarantee which is registered in the Royal Court. The alternative is for the mortgage to be provided to the company with the buyers giving guarantees themselves.

The costs:

Because the transaction is more complicated, the costs are higher than those for a normal property transaction. Shop around mortgage lenders and law firms as some, like Crill Canavan, offer discounted fees as well as advice on how to run the company.

As an essential employee you must seek good advice before buying a house. It is a complicated process and your lawyer will ensure that you are fully protected at all stages.

architecture

St Helier at a crossroads

The President of the Association of Jersey Architects (AJA), Mike Waddington, believes St Helier now stands at a major crossroads. Mr Waddington, Director of Naish Waddington and President of the AJA, agreed with the current view expressed in the Island Plan Green Paper that 'demand for homes... can be met by the potential to provide homes from within the existing built-up area and through the development of some existing brownfield sites'

St Helier has to become a place where people both choose and are proud to live in, rather than their only alternative. By making better use of what we've got, and with seed funding from the Esplanade Quarter Development, there's a tremendous opportunity to regenerate St Helier as a place to live. Great architecture, brave political leadership and the need to embrace 21st century urban living are the key to making this successful. There is a need to be careful to protect St Helier's rich historic character but at the same time said we, as a community, ought not be frightened to invite architectural innovation and sustainability. Many of the ideas in the Island Plan Review are not new, for the Housing Forum in 1998 advocated 'greater density in St Helier' as a means to safeguard our countryside but it is reassuring that these early ideas have re-emerged and become reinforced in the document.

The Association of Jersey Architects have worked jointly with Planning and Environment on many key initiatives including Jersey Architecture Week, Jersey Design Guide and assisting in the processes of the Design Review Group. Accordingly the AJA will be commenting on the Island Plan Review in due course in more detail.

My initial thoughts on the Island Plan Review are that St Helier now stands at a major crossroads and we have several joined-up 'once in a generation' opportunities including creating Jersey's largest ever development and new central business district at Esplanade Quarter and the longer term and visionary prospect of relocating our commercial port operations to La Collette. This will then lead to regenerating all of Commercial Buildings, providing us with the possibility to seamlessly link the working port with the historic port, and create a wonderful mixture of shops, restaurants and places for people to live. We can create new family homes at the Waterfront and a marvellous re-generated historic port with the sort of quayside architecture al fresco streetlife that will remind islanders of St Peter Port in Guernsey. It also represents a very exciting opportunity for local architects to become involved in the regeneration of St Helier and delivering top quality, locally relevant architecture.

the business: news bites

The new pub bosses. Will they add crisps to the menu?

our pubs get liberated

The liberation group completes purchase of channel islands pub portfolio, drink wholesaler and brewery

Next time you go for a pint, it'll be supplied by the chaps above. The Liberation Group is the new Channel Islands parent company of Victor Hugo Ltd in Jersey, Bucktrout & Co Ltd in Guernsey, The Jersey Brewery and 65 pubs and bars across the Channel Islands (42 in Jersey, 21 in Guernsey and two in Alderney). The previous owner, Sandpiper CI, took a strategic decision to sell non-core assets, and The Liberation Group has been founded to buy the portfolio.

The management team behind the buy-out are Mark Crowther, CEO; Declan Hearne, Finance Director; Kenrick Brooks, Operations Director Pubs; Dave Robilliard, MD of Bucktrout & Co Ltd; Martin Flageul, MD of Victor Hugo Ltd; and Ed Daubeney, Non-Executive Director. They are supported by Graham Turner, who has been appointed Non-Executive Chairman of The Liberation Group. Mr Turner is also CEO of Tragus Group, which owns Café Rouge and Bella Italia, among other businesses.

The team have invested their own money and have the financial backing of LGV, a well-established provider of private equity in the UK market and part of the Legal & General Group. LGV has a 20 year history of successfully backing management teams in consumer, leisure, services and healthcare sectors.

The deal was largely worked out around the time of Liberation Day (2008), which had an impact on some of the deadlines of the transaction. According to CEO Mark Crowther, it became difficult to even discuss the deal without mentioning Liberation Day, so it seemed natural to name the group after the Channel Islands' most important celebration. They believe the name also reflects 'our values of independence, individuality and optimism, which are at the heart of the Channel Island character'.

Jersey mobiles come of age

Jersey Telecom marks 21 years of mobile history in Jersey

'hello? yes, I'm standing right next to you'.

21 years ago, Jersey Telecom began a telecoms revolution by introducing the first mobile network to the Island. Robert Linton, Managing Director of Robert Linton Cars (below), one of Jersey Telecom's earliest mobile customers, has no regrets about paying £1,600 for his first phone in 1987 and still has the accompanying brochure. Mr Linton said: "My Motorola 8000 S was every bit a 'brick' and was very awkward to cart around, but it gave my business the edge.... It seems strange to people now, but it was an enormous advantage and meant that, as far as I know, I'm the only person who has sold a car from Sark!"

Over the years mobile phones have shrunk from a lunch box sized brick with accompanying battery pack, to a "must have" fashion accessory. Models

And now your cutting edge technology can be even more cutting edge!

Jersey Telecom have also just unveiled a new suite of applications for their Blackberry business platform, offering bespoke third party software products, many of which are designed specifically for finance and legal markets. From laser pens that automatically backup meeting notes to a server to automatic call recording apps that mean you have a back up of all your conversations, an essential item for some industries.

Professional Qualifications – A marvellous thing to have but such a painful experience obtaining them .

As most of us who have just left full time education know, entering the world of full time employment is a bit of a shock to the system. A timetable with free periods is not factored into the 7 hour working day .(oh and by 7hour I mean 9hour). To add insult to injury, education does not stop as full time employment comes along - the next step required to climb the career ladder is to mix that high pressure full time employment world with a professional qualification and then the pressure really hits boiling point .

If you are offered to study, you are one of the lucky ones; your employer clearly values you and is making a significant investment in you. Take an accountancy qualification for example; The ACCA qualification has 14 papers, each of which require an average of 8.5 tuition days per paper add study leave, holidays and bank holidays, it comes to about 186 days out of the office and costs about £150,000 in fees and lost chargeable time.

Whilst days out of the office to study may be appealing, it could be more hassle that it is worth. When you are studying, will someone do your work or will it pile up for your return? Will your team mates love you for leaving them under-resourced for days on end? Will the clients be happy with your blocks of time off?

The answer is to have a balance. Onestudy have devised a time-table to look after the student and the employer.

- Weekly bite-size chunk classes – Number crunching classes in 3 hour weekly chunks. We know you are all super-brains but day after day of number crunching will drive you insane!
- A bit of give and take – Some classes in the evenings and weekend to avoid large chunks of time out the office. Also, keep your precious study leave days for the exam week when you may need to cram .

Onestudy is the only provider in the channel islands offering the full ICSA programme every season and an ACCA programme based on minimising time out of the office. To date they have achieved outstanding pass rates, including 2 ICSA worldwide prizewinners at professional level. Their material is new and innovative, niche revision aids cement learning and the qualified, experience lecturers are passionate about what they do.

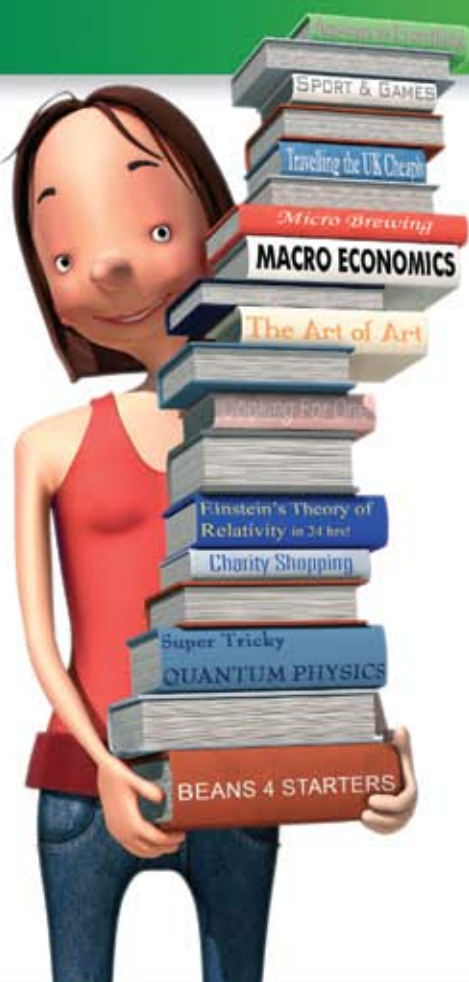

There are many ways to gain this qualification, the decision on which path to take seems pretty obvious! Contact Onestudy Training for more information.

on the wall:

James Baker

Director: Grafters

A relatively new kid on the recruitment block, Grafters saw a gap in the market for a professional labour agency. Whilst most other recruiters on the island chase the high flying finance placements, Grafters identified the potential for supplying quality workers on short term assignments ranging from warehouse operatives and site labourers through to highly experienced tradesmen and construction professionals and managers. Last year they opened their first UK office, further diversifying their business.

We caught up with founding partner James Baker to learn more.

Vital Statistics:

NAME – James Baker

BORN – Yes!

MARITAL STATUS – Married to Rachel (long suffering!)

SCHOOL – St Michaels then Canford

UNI – Mature student at Cranfield Business School

FIRST JOB – Cleaning boats for Jersey Cruising School

CAR – Several. Slight obsession with Porsche, Land Rover and motorbikes BOOK – Just read “3 Para – This is War” - outstanding if you want to know what Military Operations are really like. For me, reference to friends of mine now fighting a hard war. Just starting “Plundering the Public Sector” – a depressing look at the disgraceful and obscene wastes of money politicians subject us to.

MUSIC – Just discovered the whole iPod thing so enjoying everything from 80's up to today.

FILM – Pulp Fiction

GADGET – Leatherman

LAST HOLIDAY – Sailing in the West Indies

So, tell us what inspired you to get this off the ground?

A conversation at one of the Breakfast Club meetings gave rise to the idea of a driving agency which quickly evolved into an all encompassing labour agency.

What did you do prior to starting this business?

I built the Lido Medical Centre, I was MD of Jersey Yacht Management; prior to that I had a brief spell in the City as well as experience of a number of start ups here and the UK. I have been a professional Yacht Captain and run a yacht charter business. I was in the British Army for 7 years before studying for an MBA.

Did that teach you any lessons that helped you succeed?

Every stage of your life provides you with more knowledge and experience to better tackle the next. There is no substitute for serious hard work and commitment to the job in hand.

What's the hardest lesson you've learnt since starting Grafters?

The hardest lesson is that people who you have faith in let you down.

And funny stories that you have about the business starting out?!

We did some community work at Durrell and “Ya kwanza” took a dislike to one of our carpenters and proceeded to throw his food and large lumps of turf out of his enclosure at our worker with surprising accuracy. The novelty didn't wear off for the week he was working there!

What are your plans for the future?

Our plans for this year are to open another UK office and open an international office which we are presently researching in Hong Kong.

What advice would you give to would be entrepreneurs?

1. Control costs. Absolutely bolt down and know your costs. Far too many people get caught up in the glamour and excitement of a new business and waste money totally unnecessarily.
2. Importance of the right people. With the right people you can do anything. The problem is rarely with the product!
3. Focus – concentrate on what you should be doing. Remain flexible, but stick to what your business is about and don't get distracted with ‘hair brain’ ideas. Hard work does pay off!

What do you like to do in your downtime?

Getting afloat is a near necessity if the weather is good. I also enjoy driving and motorbiking in Europe – little can beat dawn breaking in a great car on deserted roads - preferably heading to the South of France via the Col de Turini.

About the business:

Grafters is Jersey's only professional labour agency. They supply quality workers on short term assignments ranging from warehouse operatives and site labourers through to highly experienced tradesmen and construction professionals and managers.

Increasingly companies are aware of the true cost of directly employing their own workforce and instead choose to outsource their workforce and the associated hassles to a 3rd party.

Last year they opened their first UK office which differs significantly from their Jersey operation. In the UK they concentrate on specialist roles and headhunting for the construction and engineering industries. Apparently the volumes are much lower, but the assurance of quality candidates has proved a successful offering so far!

How I became a fund administrator

Vania Batista

Vania joined Kleinwort Benson in October 2007 and has been working in the Fund Administration team in Jersey. She was born in Portugal but has lived in Jersey since she was six. She studied Spanish and Portuguese at Southampton University for four years.

Before she graduated she spent a year teaching in Seville and then once Vania returned to the Island she secured a job with a firm that enabled her to use her language skills. Many clients were British ex-pats living in Spain and Portugal who often needed assistance in contacting their local banks and Independent Financial Advisers (IFAs).

Vania moved to Kleinwort Benson for the opportunity to develop her knowledge of the funds industry further and to work for a company whose name she had recognised for a long time within Jersey. Vania has recently taken the first module in the Certificate of Offshore Administration at the Jersey Business School. The module "Introduction to Fund Management" is part of the course that is intended to inform and introduce students to the Finance Industry. The next module will teach the Regulatory Environment for the funds industry, which Vania will begin at evening classes in September.

"I first became aware of Kleinwort Benson when I was still at school following a Careers Fair that was held whilst taking A Levels. Since then I have always been aware of the name and have known a lot of people that work there, so when I saw the opportunity in the Fund Administration team advertised, I was keen to give it my best shot. It has proved to be the right decision to take and I have thoroughly enjoyed the beginning of my career here".

"The opportunities at Kleinwort Benson are much better than I first thought. I have had a lot of support to help me fully understand my job role and I have been given a lot of tuition about the Industry. As a Fund Specialist, I have contact with a lot of clients and my day-to-day role includes taking deal instructions, placing deals, updating the share register and sending clients contract notes. I also deal with clients' queries and issue statements. I don't do this in isolation and every day I am learning more and more from my colleagues in the team who are able to share and pass on their knowledge and experience to me."

"I love living in Jersey and the opportunity at Kleinwort Benson has given me a career with excellent prospects in an Industry that I find fascinating. I am also able to balance my work life with my home life and can take advantage of the lifestyle that Jersey offers including the fabulous beaches – which as summer is upon us is an important consideration!"

Longueville Manor celebrates prestigious Cateys recognition as Independent Hotel of the Year finalist Longueville Manor owners Malcolm and Patricia Lewis are celebrating after last night's Caterer and Hotelkeeper Awards in London revealed they had been short listed for the prestigious Independent Hotel of the Year Catey. To be short listed in this category is testament to the fact that Longueville Manor is competing successfully alongside some of the country's most respected hotels.

The Independent Hotel of the Year category is for any independent business of three units or fewer, wholly owned and operated by its owner. It will be a successful business of any size, category or market level, show excellence in its chosen market and offers an example to which others can aspire, being able to demonstrate particular achievements in the past year.

"To be short listed for a Catey is a fantastic achievement for us and is particularly meaningful because the awards are nominated, selected and rewarded by our industry peers", says Malcolm Lewis. "Last night the hard work and dedication of all Longueville Manor staff was recognised on a national level and we are really proud to have made it onto the shortlist."

This year's ceremony marks a milestone for the Caterer and Hotelkeeper Awards as they celebrate 25 years of recognising and applauding the best of British hospitality.

Plums Lingerie, the exclusive lingerie boutique, has reached the top 40 of the HSBC Business Stars competition in the regional finals for the London area.

The Jersey boutique, owned and run by Patricia Rees and Katherine Salt has been open since August 2006. Plums Lingerie specialises in providing lingerie, nightwear and swimwear for women from an A - H cup. The key to the business's success has been the high level of customer service and their expertise in fitting. The top 40 were invited to an exclusive networking event at the Barbican in London that Katherine attended. She commented: "We were thrilled to reach the top 40. The other companies were so innovative and successful it was a real compliment to be invited. It was a great opportunity to meet other entrepreneurs and learn about how they started their businesses."

twin-go!

What do you think of when you think of 'hot hatches'? The Mk1 Golf Gti, surely? Fiesta XR2? Vauxhall Nova? Something newer? How about the Peugeot 205 Gti or Civic Type-R?

All worthy claimants to the hot hatch mantle but that's too obvious for us here at Gallery. You may have noticed that this month's theme is 'decades' and if there's one type of car that's survived through the decades since the 70's it's the hot hatch and we wanted to see how one manufacturers' take on the hot hatch theme has changed.

A Renault Twingo? Aren't they those ugly things that only French people ever bought? Hardly a hot hatch. Not any more.

With the imminent release of the Twingo Sport 130 we were keen to see what the current range topper, the GT 100 was capable of. So what has this got in common with previous hot Renaults?

When other manufacturers were busy shoehorning in bigger and bigger engines, Renault thought out of the box and gave us the Renault 5 GT Turbo sporting a mere 1.4 litre motor but with a turbocharger to boost (quite literally) the output of their pocket rocket and they've done just that with the Twingo GT 100 too. This prompted is to test the Twingo as opposed to the latest in a line of hot Clios that began in the 90's with the Clio Williams as it's just, well, a bit different.

We're told it's the performance of a 1.6 litre car but with the insurance premium and economy of a 1.2 litre car and that's no lie. I can honestly say that it feels about as punchy and capable as a 2 litre Golf, which isn't surprising considering the Twingo is only 15hp shy of the Golf and a miles lighter to boot.

You really notice the torque at around 2500rpm when accelerating in all of the gears (up to 40mph, officer) with peak torque at a mere 3000rpm, all 145nm of it which isn't to be sniffed at in a so called 'micro-hatch'. Fascinatingly though there is no lag, noticeable torque steer or any of the other negative aspects usually associated with turbocharged cars and coupled with what seems to be a very capable chassis that isn't hiding any nasty surprises when it comes to somewhat enthusiastic cornering the GT 100 is a hoot and the 130 Sport is sure to be a force to be reckoned with at any traffic light GP.

Despite managing the 0-60 sprint in a respectable 9.8 seconds and not running out of puff until a claimed 117 mph the Twingo GT 100 still manages to be environmentally conscious, creating the least CO₂ of any 100hp car and returns 47.8mpg on a combined cycle. Thrifty, AND nifty.

On the inside you're greeted with just a rev counter in front of you and a giant digital speedo display in the centre of the dash which not only looks great but is easily visible – so much so that it's a good job that the GT comes with tinted rear and side windows to stop Mr Plod seeing your giant digital speed readout should you be caught on the wrong side of 40mph whilst enjoying our quiet country lanes.

Air conditioning comes as standard, as does a full length tinted glass roof, the front of which tilts and slides electronically and helps to give the illusion of greater headroom for rear seat passengers – not that it isn't ample mind you, all but the tallest of people will have no problems sitting in the rear of the car thanks to the sliding rear seats which allow you to trade off boot space for legroom and vice versa. Other standard gadgets include electric windows, electric mirrors, ABS and a CD player, with optional Bluetooth and iPod (other digital personal music players are available) connectivity, parking sensors and a range of exterior decals and stripes to name but a few extras available to make the car your very own.

I must admit that the CD player housing seems somewhat odd, as do the two tone dash and door cards but these are tiny gripes and fortunately the interior seems sturdy and hard wearing unlike most other French cars that have preceded it!

The quirky styling continues outside, combining curves with flat surfaces and defining lines in what most will consider to be a 'Marmite' car – at first I loved the slightly bulbous but friendly look of the front but wasn't so sure about the angular rear but it all makes sense when it comes to keeping the car compact. So much so that I almost didn't believe my eyes when I read the tyrewall that stated the car was on 15" rims, the Twingo GT manages to make them look deceptively small.

All in all, the Twingo GT 100 might not quite win over people looking at buying, say a Fiesta ST, Suzuki Swift or Volkswagen Polo GTi it's definitely worth considering if you're after an affordable, good looking and surprisingly practical small car that's fun to drive AND cheap to run – and let's not forget about cutting down our CO2 emissions either people.

Oh, but if you are thinking of buying that Fiesta, Swift, Polo, Corsa or similar small hot hatch it might be worth waiting for the Twingo Sport 130 to arrive – I've got a feeling it's going to take a few people by surprise.

The Renault Twingo GT 100 is available from Bagot Road Garage.

E.S.P.

Time...2.30 am
Location...Country road, England
Conditions...mild, dry, clear sky

A while ago I was driving my car at 60 miles an hour down a long straight two way road. It was 2.30 in the morning and there was no other traffic. The roads were dry. There was a low wall on my side of the road with bushes behind it and no pavement but a pavement on the other side of the road. No other cars, no pedestrians, straight road, music on, cruise control on, what harm could I do? What could possibly go wrong.

Then, from behind the wall, a cat jumped into the road directly in front of the car.

It landed only feet away, almost in the line of my site down the bonnet. So many things went through my mind at that moment; it was a fluffy cat, very long fine hair – probably a bit of pedigree in there somewhere, and how it ducked its head as it landed, how it crouched, coiled, its intense expression and how its eyes were locked on the car – ah yes, Persian, and in my mind I screamed “Don’t run, please don’t run”

My own cat had been knocked over and killed two weeks earlier and the tragic irony came to me in that moment as well. That day I had cursed people that drive fast and the fact that cats, or any animals for that matter and roads just don’t go together. I thought how unfair it was that I would now be taking some other family’s pet away from them; that they would have to feel, and go through, what I had. That single instant going on and on.

And while that was going through my mind I swung the wheel over, hard.

I don’t know if you have ever crashed a car before, (I have) but there is an awful moment when you think, “Mayday Mayday Mayday we’re going in”. It’s at the moment when you realise crashing is inevitable. It is not a nice feeling. Your brain, in truly enigmatic style, allows you another endless instant to consider all sorts of things; car repair bills, cats, insurance premiums, brick walls, blue lights, police radio chatter, and usually lots of bad words, and then there is usually a very loud and expensive bang.

And sometimes the lights go out.

I’ve had this car for a while now. I’ve never taken much notice of the so called safety features but it is my first car with traction control, and a.b.s. and whatever else it has. I never really appreciated what in reality these mean though. I understood what they are meant to do (sometimes) but only in a fairly vague sort of way. They all seem to come from brainy Germans, and I always considered them sort of gimmicks. Things you’d never really be able to tell if they did anything or not – especially as I didn’t plan to crash ever. They just don’t do anything obvious, rather like a parachute; mostly it just sits there, and that’s a good analogy actually because same as a parachute they do just sit there, until that one time when you really, really need them.

So, cat jumps in front of car, I swerve very hard before I’ve even thought about it, and now the car is going sideways, veering toward the other side of the road, I’m wrestling with the steering trying to correct the spin, and it flicks and spins the other way, back towards the wall. This happens so fast I don’t think my mind was keeping up, but as it flicked back to the left I thought; “this is it, I am definitely going in”.

“Mayday, Mayday, Mayday, We’re going in”

At the same time I also became aware of all the sounds the car was making, like the sound of road drills coming from all around me in Dolby surround sound. As the car spun first one way then the other, the noise was switching from corner to corner around me, front left, back right, back left, and way too fast for me to figure it out, until suddenly as the wall and trees were looming, the car just straightened out as if a great hand had steadied it and I was driving straight and level again. All be it on the other side of the road. It was over in a second.

I stopped, badly shaken, trying to figure out what had happened. I could have wept with relief. It had been the ABS - anti lock braking, and possibly something to do with the traction control, but whatever it was it had saved me from something probably very bad. I have never been so impressed. I knew the car had been out of control, and I knew I was going to crash, and to feel it all be pulled back into order was extraordinary. I was in awe. I still am. I feel like I owe that car something.

I looked back down the road, and thankfully couldn’t see any little shapes lying there. I gingerly reversed back and parked, got out and sat on the wall and lit, with shaking hands a cigarette. I looked over and the cat appeared on the wall a few feet away, looking at me suspiciously. Perfectly happy by the looks of him, the little bastard. I went over and gave him a stroke, and told him how lucky he was. He was part Persian – I’d been right about that, and quite friendly, and none the worse apart from perhaps being minus one life.

So, when you are buying your next car, and the salesman says it has A.B.S. and E.S.P. or A.F.U. or any other bizarre acronym for something that may just sit there and hopefully never need to do anything, make sure you say yes and ask him to tell you just what they do. It is systems like these that truly demonstrate the benefit and development of modern technology in cars. They really make a difference, though hopefully you will never need to use them. Very much like a parachute.

Workout for the beach

Get ready for an intensive blast that will do a final bit of tightening up in preparation for the summer holidays, many of you want to know a good work out to flatten the stomach and pull in the waist. So I shall cover four exercises that will help to tone this area. Work on around 3-4 sets of 20 repetitions for each exercise. Remember however it is also important to be following a balanced nutrition regime to keep excess body fat at a low level, as it is not possible to shift fat from an area of the body by just exercising that part.

Body Balance Situp

The advantage of using your own balance instead of hooking your feet under something, is that it stops your hip flexors coming into play and allows all the work to be focused on your abdominals making them work much harder.

Lower Abdominal Crunch

For this you can hold a swiss ball between your ankles or use nothing but make sure you are managing to lift your pelvis off the floor with each repetition, to gain the full effect of the movement.

Cable Chop (Obliques)

Our obliques are often neglected in exercise, but they are extremely important as they help the trunk of our body to rotate, by using exercises which make us twist we will also help our waist to stay in better shape.

Balanced Back Extension

With the other exercises working more on the front of our trunk, we do also need to maintain balance. Back extensions on a swiss ball are a good way of maintaining some lower back strength and tone, and again by not securing your feet and relying on your balance on the ball, we focus on the lower back muscles and stop the hamstrings coming into play.

Don't Put Your Back out

Having Fun In The Sun!

The last thing you want on holiday is back pain. According to the latest research from the British Chiropractic Association, a shocking one in three people suffer from back pain and it is often when people are on holiday, out of their normal routine, that things go wrong. So be aware of the potential pitfalls before and during your holiday with tips from BCA chiropractor, Marie-Christine Dix.

Suitcase selection

Choose wisely, buy the lightest case possible that has wheels, hard cases can sometimes weigh a tonne with nothing in them

Push, don't pull!

Many wheeled cases encourage you to pull the case handle from behind but this makes the upper body/back twist. Instead, push the case in front

Make adjustments

Over 32,000 people visit a BCA chiropractor each month with injuries that are aggravated, or caused by, poor driving posture. So if you're driving to your holiday destination, ensure the seat position is slightly backwards so that it feels natural and that your elbows are at a comfortable and relaxed angle

Flying high

If you're flying, drink plenty of soft drinks NOT alcohol during the flight, as this will cause dehydration, which can aggravate muscle pain

Air-exercise

you will be restricted to your seat for most of the flight but avoid stiffness by doing shoulder shrugs, buttock clenches and foot circles

Lounging around

If you're heading to the sun lounger in search of that perfect tan, try not to lie on your tummy with your back and neck arched back to read a book. Put the book on the floor and read over the edge of the sun bed this should allow you to have your head and neck in a more neutral position

Keep these tips in mind and you'll be well on your way to a pain-free and enjoyable holiday! Just remember at the first sign of discomfort, contact Dr Marie-Christine Dix at Back to Balance Chiropractic Clinic, Lido de France Medical Centre, St Helier.

sporting events

The 2008 Kleinwort Benson Yacht Challenge.

Conditions were good on the day of the race, and all but three of the boats that started the race finished. The overall winners of the race were MadCap who have been competing in the race for over 20 years but who have never won, so it was a great day for them!

300 guests attended the after party which was themed with a sixties flavour, celebrating the fact that Kleinwort Benson arrived in the Channel Islands in the early sixties and this year it is their 45th anniversary of Kleinwort Benson operating from the Channel Islands - the only one of the financial institutions to have been in the CI the longest and involved in the community so widely.

There was music from the popular 60s band 4 Bills and a Ben who were flown in from London for the party. They went down really well with everyone there and had the crowd dancing until 1am!

The Milk Shot Mixed Beach Volleyball Tournament

This event attracted everyone from novices to island players. 'We Dig Milk Shots' beat '2e2' in a fantastic final, with both sides fielding Island players. Milk Shot also gave trophies for the highest ranked teams from different business sectors. 'Oh-Gee-Er' from - you guessed it - Ogier - won the trophy for the highest-ranked legal team; Insurance Corporation were the best corporate team; and the finance sector trophy went to HLB Jackson Fox. There was also a great turn-out for the men's and ladies' fours tournaments, and the boys from 'We Dig Milk Shots' formed the 'Milkshot Hotshots' and took the men's title. In the ladies final, the ever-strong '2e2' beat 'Non-Jersey Delights' 2-0.

Entries are still open for the two tournaments which is on 9/10 August go to;
www.jerseyvolleyball.com

The Ford open golf tournament at les mielles

This is the largest gold Tournament of the Year in Jersey. 214 entrants took to the Les Mielles Golf & Country Club course between 5.30 am and 7.00 pm. Luckily there was great weather, and a good day on the course led to a fantastic after party!

A Ford Kuga was put up as a Hole-in-One prize on the 8th hole and was almost won by Annette Laffoley who was only 2' 6" from the hole! The Ford Owners Trophy and Prize was presented to Paul Gibaut (hcp 18) with an excellent net score of 68. Other Hole-in-One prizes were up for grabs and Maurice McEwan sank his tee-shot on the final par 3, 18th hole, winning himself a set of Taylormade Burner Irons & Wedges!

Iain Carse, Managing Director of Ford in the Channel Islands presented the prizes and stated that it had been an excellent day, much enjoyed by everyone and the event raised £350 for Jersey Hospice.

sport interview

Ryan Hervé : Surf Board Maker

How did it all start?

I made my first surfboard when I was 15 and then when I was 19 I set up my own surf board company Nutz.

What have you been up to?

I have been living out in Australia working for Simon Anderson and Darren Handley learning all about designing and creating surfboards. Currently two surfing World Champions, Mick Fanning and Steph Gilmore, are riding Darren's board's (DHD) so I was really lucky to be being trained by arguably the best board makers in the world.

What is next?

When I was down in Hossegor (France) in 2000 I met Robbie Page, who was a top Pro Surfer in the 80's. I've always kept in touch with him and made boards for him, actually this year he won the Worlds Masters Championships, which is amazing. Robbie has a company called Cream Surf Wax and Surfboards and he has asked me to come work for him. The company recently won an Environmentally Friendly Business competition and as a consequence are now backed by VW. They have an amazing new, environmentally friendly and flexible material that they make the boards out of. They also get to use the VW Shaping Machines, which are accurate to 100th of a mm! They've created a surfboard which won't soak up any water if it gets a ding and as, it's more flexible, it feels like it has suspension which absorbs all the chops and ripples on a wave. They feel alive under your feet! They are so much faster and last longer than old styles of boards. They are called Hydroflex Technology Boards, and if I get someone's height, weight, shoe size, surfing ability and find out what they want to get out of surfing then we put it into the computer and it'll work out the perfect board for them. Everyone who has had one so far has not wanted to go back to a normal surfboard.

for more information e-mail nutzsurfboards@hotmail.com or pop into Freedom to see the new boards.

SEYMOUR HOTELS OF JERSEY

trialbiking

Bike Trials is a form of mountain biking that uses a lightweight seatless bike to get around man made obstacles. You've probably seen these guys flying around every new monument in town. We spoke to Adam Le Cheminant, Ben Girdwood, Alex Johnson & Daniel Jeanne about this new sport.

From start to finish these guys never fail to impress. They are constantly riding over things that most people wouldn't dream of riding on. Trial biking has more freedom than trial motorbiking as it can be done pretty much anywhere. Although this is the most physically and technically demanding of the cycling sports, riders still manage to ride with persistent skill day in and day out. It takes a lot of practice to get as good as some of these guys. However not everyone in Jersey appreciates some of the awesome skills the riders have, and because the sport utilises many man-made obstacles including benches, walls and monuments, many people see it as vandalism rather than a sport. This is the same for many sports these days including skateboarding, bmxing and inline skating.

How did you get into trials?

Most of us heard about the sport through our friends and family and got drawn in by photos that we had seen. We started riding together after seeing each other riding.

Where do you ride?

We tend to ride in and around town but we usually get moved on by the police when we ride in the centre of town. We are also given the opportunity to ride at the West Show every year in front of a large crowd which is a great way to show people this different sport. We can usually be seen at Liberation Square or around the Waterfront.

Who do you ride with?

Because there's so few trial riders in Jersey we know pretty much everyone and we all ride together.

When was your worst slam?

There's none that come to mind now, but we always have cuts and bruises on our shins, from when we miss our pedals.

Do you hope to start riding professionally?

Well it's very hard to get sponsors especially in Jersey as there are so few companies that are willing to sponsor riders, so you have to be amazing to get noticed. Although it is very hard, it would be nice!

Moran makes it two out of two

The Rabey's Commercial Vehicles National Hillclimb welcomed the Nicholson McLaren MSA British Hillclimb Championship once again to the shores of Jersey for rounds 17 and 18 of this hotly contested championship last month on Thursday 17th July.

The morning practice runs were held in seasonal sunshine as competitors got used to the twisty hill which has the greatest elevation change of any of the British Hillclimb Championship rounds.

Defending British Champion and former hill record holder Martin Groves set the initial pace with a 40.52 with his other 2 main rivals only managing 41 second runs. But it was only practice and the 2 important qualifying rounds where to be held after the lunch break in slightly cooler conditions which meant that the chance of any records being broken looked unrealistic.

Fastest in the 1st qualifying round was the current championship leader Scott Moran with a time of 39.48. Having come close in the past, he is on form this year having built up a healthy lead in the championship. Rob Turnbull qualified 2nd and Martin Groves 3rd both in Gould racing cars.

Fastest 4 qualifiers included the big 3 of Scott Moran, Trevor Willis and Martin Groves and where joined by Chris Merrick who was tipped to possibly take a victory back home with him to the U.K.

One record did get broken with a large margin. Gary Hotton who recently gained the crown of fastest man on two wheels at the five mile road sprints took another record to add to his collection. He lowered the unlimited motorbike class record from a 48.83 set by Guernsey competitor Peter Davies in 1999 to a 46.46 on his last official run of the day.

The next local Hillclimb will be held at Bouley Bay which is the Bank Holiday Monday Hillclimb on the 25th August which will see another large entry.

The JMC & LCC would like to thank all Officials, Marshals, St Johns Ambulance, Normandy Rescue, Sponsors Rabey's Commercial Vehicles, residents and businesses at Bouley Bay.

bass in the place liquid

If you're a drum and bass fanatic, then you will be hard pressed to find a better night than this, with reigning 'Best DJ' by Drum and Bass Arena for the 6th year running Andy C and distinctive MC GQ by his side. From an early drum kit obsession at the age of 5, this gradually turned into a fascination for dance music with an array of pirate radio stations in Essex encouraging Andy's thirst for it. Since 1993, when he erupted onto the jungle and rave scene, his relentless DJing and perseverance has paid off with his unstoppable rise as a DJ, producer, A&R and label boss.

DRIFT: THE MERGE LIVE

The Merge moved up to Manchester just over 2 years ago in order to fully develop as a band within one of the country's most vibrant and proven unsigned scenes, adding a couple of Mancunians to the line up along the way in the shape of Murph & Farny. This comes after a large degree of success within Jersey's own live scene. The band's success within the island saw them attract a noteworthy fan base (later to be labelled the bracket) and propelled them into the elite of Jersey's live bands. DJ support on the night from Dan Sharpe, Carlo & Mr Livingstone.
