I WONDER WHAT GEORGE ORWELL WOULD THINK if I played him 'Acceptable in the 80s' by Calvin Harris. The decade that was predicted to bring gloom, dystopia and Big Brother watching over all of us (not just wannabe D list celebrities in a dodgy house) instead brought neon, spandex, yuppies and a culture about as far from Oceania and thoughtcrime as possible. The reality now mocked for it's retro faux pas, Orwell's 1984 envisioned bleak and futile rebellion against tyranny and socialism. Instead we had rebellion manifested in fact by hair spray, shoulder pads and rampant capitalism in a world of exposed brick to a sound track of stone wash denim clad soft rock.

Predicting the future CAN be tricky. You think they'd have learnt from the 1984 curse but no, 1984 saw the making of '2010' - A film that predicted that 3 years ago we'd find aliens on Jupiter when, in reality, everyone was too busy playing Angry Birds. Hard to imagine in a time when Apple computers could only produce green text on a computer screen the size of an iPad mini.

This month we take a two pronged approach to the vision and reality of 1984. A lot of readers will have been just starting school in 1984, some were yet to be been born. Scary. It was the year that brought us Ghostbusters, Gremlins, Madonna's first number one and an era that classified Lionel Ritchie as 'urban' music, The 'Lil Wayne of his day for sure. You can reminisce with Grant's look back at the 80s (pg. 10) and our 80s inspired gadgets (pg 120).

If you're more into the world of though police, check out our selection of 1984esque dystopian visions of cinema with Chris (pg.42) or, if you fancy getting away from it all, why not consider some of the worlds more totalitarian friendly locations, we check some options out on pg.34. It seemed that last month you needn't have left Jersey to imagine a dark and cold world as the snow took over. I was trapped in the mountains, surrounded by snow, unable to return home as snowdrifts and high winds turned Jersey into something from The Day After Tomorrow. A little ironic.

In preparation for our next snowy onslaught, we've prepared a guide to survival in Jersey snow (pg.18), things to consider to avoid getting your Audi R8 stuck in a snowdrift and other such horrors faced this time round. Now that I've bought a sledge chances are it's going to be 20 years but you can never be too careful...

EMAILS TO MONKEY

Sometimes we get answer phone messages from our readers telling us how much they've enjoyed something in the magazine. Sometimes we get messages from little old ladies using language little old ladies shouldn't use. We even had a heavy breather once who either has a magazine fetish or dialed the wrong number. That's another story. We love feedback. It's the way we improve and maintain our goal of connecting with our audience. We thought that this year we'd document this feedback in a 'letters to the editor' style page. Whether tweets, emails, website comments or answer phone messages, we'll be picking the best one each month and buying that reader lunch.

80s culture The decade that keeps on giving

words: Grant Runyon | illustration: Matt Le Maistre Smith

re you obsessed with Michael J Fox? Perhaps you're addicted to hairspray and shoulder pads? Do you dream about the Ninja Turtles? Chances are you're caught in a neon timewarp to the decade we can't forget.

I was raised by hippies, so by the time I was old enough to think for myself I was thoroughly bored of hearing about the sixties. Aside from the fact that 'free love' is the last thing you want to hear your parents talking about, to a child born in 1979 the sixties sounded both distant and a bit crap, like Portsmouth. I don't have kids, but when I look around I see a lot of tiny brains who can't wait to learn to speak just so they can tell their parents to shut up about the eighties.

There are some decades that nobody gets nostalgic about, like the 1940s, unless you like the idea of dressing entirely in brown and rebuilding Europe from a pile of smoking rubble. We remember the 1980s as much more glamorous, and so there's been periodic eighties revivals happening for longer than the eighties themselves actually existed. The eighties are so popular that I worry that by the time my generation are old enough to run the world, laws will be passed making all other decades illegal. Maybe this came about because the children of the eighties have been blessed with an unprecedented expansion in the means of communication, giving us more opportunities to talk/blog/text about the things we half-remember from our VHS childhoods. The children of the 1940s grew up thinking that three TV channels was the height of technological achievement, so it was unlikely that the BBC would have ever themed Saturday night around a retrospective of The Goon Show, but by now there's probably a digital TV channel up in the 300s that only runs documentaries about Boy George's hats. David Hasselhof still has work, Garbage Pail Kids are going for crazy money on eBay and I've even seen a website devoted exclusively to writing about vintage crisps.

The crisps thing is a good example of something slightly weird about all this, in that it's impossible to be objective or even informative about something that hasn't physically existed since you were ten. You can remember how Crispy Tubes made you feel, not how they really tasted. I watched those 'I love the Eighties' TV clipshows and am convinced that the minor celebs taking part hadn't bothered to review most of the stuff they were wittering on about. Vernon Kaye does not care enough about his audience to actually spend time watching DangerMouse on Youtube, whereas I researched this article by travelling back in time on a Raleigh Chopper covered in LEDs and silver foil. Great Scott!

EIGHTIES TELLY

We were barely out of the 80s before people started getting teary-eyed about the TV of their childhoods, and since then there's been a thriving industry selling Roland Rat bumbags and Cabbage Patch Kids dolls, to people who miss the days when Doctor Who had wobbly sets and there was nothing weird about Jimmy Savile introducing Gary Glitter on Top Of The Pops. Those were innocent times.

Most of the nostalgia tends to be directed towards cartoons, probably because few people have memories wooly enough that they remember Grange Hill as anything other than a grim, grey launchpad for people who'd end up wrestling a Mitchell in Eastenders. Sadly you're in for a bit of a shock if you actually go back and watch Thundercats or Dogtanian in the age of Pixar. Whilst stop-motion stuff like The Wombles, Morph and Button Moon has retained a certain shonky charm, the likes of He Man has not aged well - you'll find smoother animation on an advert for confused.com, but minus Skeletor's camp magic. Noble exceptions are the unexpectedly gory Legendary Cities Of Gold and the animated Transformers movie, which has matured like a fine, robotic wine. The entire thing is on Youtube - you're in for a treat.

EIGHTIES CINEMA

The blockbuster movies of the 1980s cast a long shadow, so much so that they are still being recycled three decades on, though even quadrupling the budget cannot capture the wooden-faced magic of Ahhhnold Schwarzenegger gurning against blue-screen explosions. If you revisit Predator you are soon aware that you could do a better job of the 'predator camo' SFX with iMovie, but the film remains outstanding despite these limitations. Perhaps it's because the cast have done so many steroids that they think the Predator is real, or maybe it's that they know they're working in the golden age of the action blockbuster. Aliens, Die Hard, The Running Man, Indiana Jones; what they lacked in convincing bad guy accents they made up for with cheesy enthusiasm, snappy one-liners and copious supporting roles for Gary 'tombstone teeth' Busey.

The eighties was also the golden age of slasher and horror movies, the pop star vanity project (Purple Rain; Desperately Seeking Susan), and films with Eddie Murphy in them. Even films pitched towards families, teenagers and young children are an eighties goldmine. I've watched the three Gs (Goonies, Gremlins and Ghostbusters) every six months since the day I learned to copy VHS tapes, and love them right down to their implausible plot holes and occasionally crude racial stereotyping. I have friends that feel the same way about The Breakfast Club and Heathers, although if anybody is still rooting for The Lost Boys they're too polite to tell me.

EIGHTIES MUSIC

At the time, many people expected eighties music to vanish in a synthesised puff of dry ice on the cusp of the 1990s. Oh, how wrong we were. From the overblown power ballad to the hyper-produced saccharine pop act, eighties music has out-lived many of its detractors, the sixties and seventies musos who were appalled by drum machines and records that didn't contain enough single guitar solos. Eighties music is the ultimate artistic expression of the decade, combining a goofy love affair with the bleeps and bloops of new technology and an oddball approach to fashion preserved perfectly in its pioneering music videos, even if nobody has subsequently managed to look good in legwarmers or a ruffly shirt.

Eighties music is also incredibly diverse, from the brash explosion of hip hop, the urban rhythms of early house and techno to the drunken excesses of hair metal. Pub bores in Clash T shirts always go on about the influence of punk, but the sonic and lyrical experimentation of eighties post-punk artists like Talking Heads, New Order and The Smiths has had a far greater influence on today's musicians than anything the Sex Pistols coughed up.

The eighties was also the sunset era of the vinyl record and the cassette tape. Vinyl clings to life in the dusty cupboards of ageing DJs and dedicated audiophiles, whereas the humble C90 lives on only in spirit, the inspiration for a billion iTunes playlists and a generation of audio pirates raised on high-speed dubbing and Dolby Noise Reduction. Now that's what I call music.

We were barely out of the 80s before people started getting teary-eved about the TV of their childhoods, and since then there's been a thriving industry selling Roland Rat bumbags and Cabbage Patch Kids dolls to people who miss the days when Doctor Who had wobbly sets and there was nothing weird about Jimmy Savile introducing Gary Glitter on Top Of The Pops.

BECAUSE QUALITY MATTERS gallery

Cheryl Markosky is a freelance national journalist regularly contributing to The Sunday Times, Country Life, Mail on Sunday and the Telegraph.

Style by IMAGINATION

Contrary to popular opinion, designing the interiors of a home isn't just about doing arty things with the space. Uber-cool designer of the moment Chris Dezille from award-winning design consultancy Honky (www.honky.co.uk) says everything stems from the people living there - even if they're imaginary.

"I try to personalize these places. For instance, I'm calling two of the three new show apartments at Portelet Bay 'monsoon divorce', " he says with a smile. In a tongue-in-cheek fashion, he's invented a whole backstory for characters worthy of BAFTA nominations for their performances in a BBC Sunday evening drama.

"In my head, I can visualize a businessman who used to have a hig house on Jersey. He's really into boats, but got caught playing around on a sailing weekend. His wife's taken half of everything, but the upside is he's set up a new life for himself in this fabulous three-bedroom apartment."

Carrying through the ship ahoy philosophy, thin-planked Amtico flooring with cross-grain detail resembles the deck of a boat in the new pad of the ghost skipper occupant. It's all very clean, crisp and Scandinavian (think Borgen meets the Channel Islands), with a lot of natural wood and navy blue.

"It's a fresh start," declares Dezille, "with older pieces he's brought with him mixed with newer things, such as wooden Ercol furniture, a Tom Dixon captain's spindle chair, linen and plenty of natural light. There's a relationship to the sea, but in a clean, educated way."

By contrast, 'the divorced woman' apartment, as Dezille describes it with a twinkle in his eye, is more feminine, richly coloured and vibrant. "She's 50-something and embracing her womanbood, after years of putting up with bloody boating holidays and having to cram her clothes into a cahin cubbyhole. Now, she can lead a more glamorous life and indulge herself."

Just as we hope this once put-upon wife can go a bit mad, Dezille's done exactly that with a different mood in every room, using ochres, mustards, patterned wallpaper and reflective finishes in a happily retro Call the Midwife way.

"She's got a fantastic ground floor apartment with a massive terrace. After a long day's work the terrace becomes this big recreation space. I can see her pouring a G&T, relaxing on the lounger and then enjoying a meal with friends at the dining table that seats eight. Then they gravitate over to the big L-shaped seating area for coffee and brandy."

Of course, many marriages survive the trials of life (and even endless sailing expeditions), which is why the fourbedroom duplex apartment is for the settled couple who've made it.

Using rich faux shagreen metallic wallpaper, dark walnut flooring, greys and golds, and the modern take on the four-poster, this is brash and bold. "Why downsize when you're older? The kids have left home, but there are still three roomy guest rooms and a huge entertaining space when they come to visit with the grandchildren," suggests Dezille.

(Terms and conditions apply)

1 King Street, St Helier, Jersey www.hettich.co.uk 01534 734491

IF YOU ARE READING THIS: congratulations! You are one of the lucky survivors of Jersey's Code Red Extreme Weather Event (2013).

For a week in March, it was by no means certain that Jersey and its people would not be buried beneath our unseasonal snowfall, forgotten like a stray fish finger at the back of the freezer. As ever the Island took decisive action, and as soon as the marinas were cleared and golf courses defrosted a committee of enquiry was established. Its first recommendation? A PR campaign to promote snow awareness. We at Gallery are proud to have been chosen as the official snowmageddon media partners, and hope that you are reading this somewhere warm and free of penguins. Like us on Facebook, if you still have access to electricity!

As part of Jersey's future preparedness plans, funding has been released from the rainy day fund (to be renamed 'ask your manager if you can get a snow day fund') so that each citizen may be issued with a snow disaster survival pack containing: a sealed copy of this document, six Tracker bars, two pairs of M&S thermals, a hacksaw for cutting fallen leylandii and 200 grammes of road grit. If you've opened this, the snow must have returned. Follow this official advice, stay safe, and please do not eat the grit.

PRIORITY 1: Home safety and shelter

We hope you're reading this at home next to a fire, and that the fire is wood or coal, rather than smashed furniture or copies of Gallery Magazine. If you are trapped at work, or in a smart car beneath the Beaumont Hill glacier, don't panic - somebody will be along soon to free you. Or turn you into food. Either way, struggling is futile.

Homeowners should have been visited earlier this year by Jersey's Snow Countermeasure Safety Officers, who will have advised you on the best ways to render your dwelling polar bear-proof and comfortably above zero in the event of further cold snaps. Perhaps you're lucky enough to live in one of the luxury two-bedroom igloos slated to open mid 2013 on the site of the Plemont holiday village, in which case conserve your energy to repel savage raiders from Sark. The most important message is not to go outside, unless absolutely necessary. If you do, make a change from Jersey tradition and dress appropriately. Men: winklepickers and suit trousers worn without socks will cause gangrene; tie your bloody scarves properly. Women: unless it's August, it's probably too cold to wear a vest top and mini skirt to work.

PRIORITY 2: Food and other essentials

To avoid mass starvation, each Parish has been issued funding for an ATV snowcat to make emergency delivery of lattes, sushi and goat's cheese paninis (with onion confit) to people accustomed to eating only from St Helier coffee shops. Iceland will remain open as normal, and we have received assurances that M&S will ration supplies of Percy Pig's to those most in need. The authorities warn that anybody caught attempting to eat dairy cows or Oscar the Puffin will be made an example of. It is recommended that you fill your basement with tinned luncheon meat, as although largely inedible it offers better insulation than fibreglass, makes a handy weapon and can be utilised to farm penicillin if the hospital is smashed up by yetis (again).

PRIORITY 3: Communications

We expect that following snow chaos it may take some days for communications to return to normal, not because there's any issue with the billion pound, platinum plated fiber-optic phone lines, but because Jersey's single pipe of internet from England may well collapse under the strain of all your Instagram photos of snowmen. If this occurs, we ask that all Islanders refrain from making non-urgent communications (Harlem Shake videos, Bieber Tumblr, live-tweeting the lateness of your Graze box delivery) and reserve our precious bandwidth for warning others about direwolves and wildlings prowling St John's village.

PRIORITY 4: Transport and resources

In the event of further snow emergency, it has been decided that all buses will be cancelled indefinitely. An unfortunate mixup with suppliers lead to LibertyBus purchasing vehicles that can only drive in the middle of the road, and the icey death slaloms of March have demonstrated that they will inevitably collide with 4x4 vehicles destined to be abandoned by college mummies as soon as a single snowflake hits their bonnets. To ensure that essential personnel (and some non-politicians) reach their destinations despite the weather, a project has been initiated to fit Terrence The Train with skis.

Contingency plans have been enacted to ensure that the Island does not run out of supplies. In short, this has entailed the hoarding of marine diesel, a coat of blue paint for the rebranded Camping Gazometer and a stern letter to the JEC instructing them not to forget to put 50p in the meter again.

PRIORITY 5: Government and administration

Plans are afoot to relocate Jersey's 'winter capital' to the North Coast, to avoid a repeat of the near disaster that occurred when several backbench members who turned up to work in St Helier were fatally gored by a mammoth. It was only through quick thinking on the part of the Attorney General that saw the wily pachyderm battered to death with the Bailiff's mace before it could eat any ministers. Schools will be closed and parents are requested to teach their children from home, perhaps via an educational screening of classic snowthemed films such as 'Alive', 'Touching The Void' and 'The Shining'.

PRIORITY 6: Culture and entertainment

During the Blitz, the people of London kept their spirits up by creating art and culture that expressed their refusal to surrender and a heartfelt desire to see normal life resume as soon as possible. In Jersey, we coped with snowmageddon by erecting rude snowmen and sledging down green lanes. It's essential to remember that survival is not just about hunting the St Mary's bigfoot for his thick coat of fur, it's also about remaining close with families and neighbours by playing games, making music and secretly voting on which neighbour you're planning to eat next.

We at Gallery look forward to seeing you following the big thaw. Keep calm and don't eat the yellow snow.

Aztec's new unique way of pitching is proving to be a great success

AZTEC GROUP SEEK LIGHT RELIEF IN AID OF CHARITY

The Aztec Group is delighted to have raised over £500 for Comic Relief last month. The day started with their marketing team cooking bacon and sausage rolls and was followed by a cake sale and many fun games. Staff paid to have their faces painted, one of the highlights of the day and manicures were also available. Staff raised over £200 to see Paul Millar, Senior Financial Reporting Manager, painted as the Grinch. Paul agreed to the unusual makeover, if staff could raise £50, but was absolutely outstounded to discover his colleagues had paid over £200 to see him turn green! Edward Moore, Chief Executive Officer, commented 'It was great to see the effort everyone made and the lengths some staff went to in order to raise money for this very worthwhile cause. Thank you to Paul for being such a great sport!'

The numbers round was always their favourite during Countdown.

Swimarathon makes a splash

Islanders have once again dug deep to support Jersey's longest running charity event, and helped raise an amazing £110,219 at the 2013 Lions Club of Jersey Swimarathon. In celebration of the Lions Club of Jersey's golden anniversary, 50 percent of the Swimarathon proceeds will directly benefit 50 local charities. The remaining 50 percent will go towards supporting the local community throughout the year.

Andrew Pearce, President of the Lions Club of Jersey, said: 'As we mark our 50th year on the Island, The Lions Club of Jersey is delighted with this fantastic sum raised, which will support a diverse range of organisations, trusts and projects that seek to improve the quality of life for people living in Jersey.

'The Swimarathon is a very important event for our Club. We are aware of how difficult it is for local charities, particularly the smaller ones in these hard economic times. We would like to thank the public for their continued generosity, and for giving these worthwhile initiatives a significant boost.'

Charitable groups as diverse as youth clubs, health associations and an animal charity are just some examples of this year's beneficiaries. Thanks to over 400 teams of more than 3,500 swimmers that took part this year. Stuart Rutledge, CEO, RBC Wealth Management – British Isles and Caribbean said: 'Despite all the snow, this year's event was once again a great success. It was inspiring to see so many Islanders come out in force for this common cause, and I thoroughly enjoyed taking part for the first time with Team RBC.'

The Swimarathon took place at the Les Quennevais Leisure Centre from 13 to 17 March. Since the first Swimarathon in 1972, the event has raised nearly £3.6 million for local charities.

When it's for charity, it's always worth two helpings

HELPING TO STAMP OUT POVERTY

Stanley Gibbons held a Cake Sale and Raffle on Friday 15th March, Red Nose Day in order to support Comic Relief. The bakers Cassidy and Michele, along with generous donations from family and friends, created a wonderful array of sweet treats some of which included lemon drizzle cake, Victoria sandwich, chocolate brownies, rocky roads, carrot cake and raspberry and coconut muffins. With the help of everybody who came along and their donations, they raised a total of £341. The raffle was also a great success and the winner was presented with a rare framed Penny Black.

KEEP IT IN MIND

Research suggests that many people still hold inaccurate views about severe mental illness. These are often negative and stigmatizing. Some think severe mental illness is untreatable; others think that people with severe mental illness cannot work or are prone to violence.

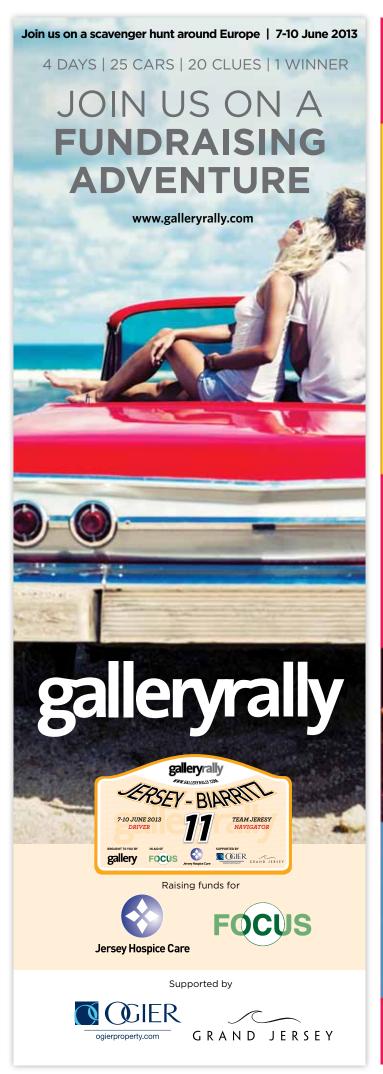

However we now know that these views do not reflect reality- and simply perpetuate discrimination and stigma. In fact, given the right services and support, people with a severe mental illness can live a full and productive life in the community, like anyone else.

Come and hear Jersey born and raised Dr Rob Whitley, Assistant Professor of Psychiatry at McGill University, Montreal, Canada, present cutting-edge research on recovery, stigma and mental illness. Following his presentation Rob will lead a panel that will take audience questions.

Join Mind, the Mental Health Chairty and Rob for a lively discussion. All are welcome, entrance is free but admission tickets will be required and these are available from Mind Jersey, Office 14, 4 Wharf Street.

The chap on the left seems a little aprehensive about the arrival of the ball. The rugby players are unphased.

Jersey Rugby stars inspire Mont a l'Abbe

Championship rugby stars Guy Thompson and Fred Silcock generously gave of their time to run a series of rugby training sessions at Mont a l'Abbe School earlier this year. Inspired by the success of the Olympics at London 2012, the JRFC players were keen to encourage a new generation of children to get involved in sport and this promises to be an innovative and exciting series of events for all the children who are taking part.

The activity was organised and funded by the players sponsor Santander in Jersey, who are co-ordinating all the arrangements as well as donating rugby balls and kit to the school. They have worked with Thompson, Silcock and Andy Jordi, Head of PE at the school, to develop a series of fun rugby sessions with the aim of developing the children's coordination and ball handling skills, in addition to learning other valuable skills, such as team work.

CISI raise over £3,000 for Multiple Sclerosis Society of Jersey

The Jersey Branch of the Chartered Insititute for Securities and Investment held theif annual dinner last month. With sponsors such as RBC Wealth Management, BNP Paribas Security Services, BPP Professional Education, Rathbones Investment Management and Schroders, it's no wonder they managed to secure a decent speaker. The evening featured comedian Hugh Dennis of 'Mary Whitehouse Experience' and 'Punt and Dennis' fame and raised a great £3000 for The Multiple Sclerosis Society of Jersey.

Plastic Not So Fantastic

Nedbank Private Wealth's Sustainability Forum kicked off the year by educating staff about what is harming the Island's beaches today. Gareth Jeffreys, Chairman of Jersey Aquatic Discovery, and also a staff member at Nedbank Private Wealth, spoke frankly to staff about the damage that discarded plastic can do to our environment and what we can do to reduce and remove this destructive substance from our beaches.

Natasha Breen, Head of the Sustainability Forum at Nedbank Private Wealth, said: "After the success of the Sustainability Forum initiatives last year, we were keen to start the year with an educational event to make staff aware of these important issues. We were delighted that one of our staff members, Gareth Jeffreys, was keen to talk about plastic and the problem it brings to our local beaches."

Jersey has over 56 miles of coastline which is home to thousands of different animal species. Although any rubbish is an eyesore on land, plastic items on the shoreline can be lethal to marine life if they are washed back out to sea, and it can even enter the food chain ending up back on our dinner plates. Nedbank Private Wealth, Le Rocquier School and Jersey Aquatic Discovery are joining forces to play a part in protecting our beaches by reducing the litter content.

On Sunday 14 April 2013 volunteers from these organisations are taking time out of their busy weekends to assist in clearing the coastline of litter. The helpers will be starting from Le Hocq slip and will be clearing as much harmful matter as time allows from the south west coastline in order to reduce its extensive impacts to Jersey's local waters.

With all these new tables we could see the next Forrest Gump standard player hailing from Jersev.

Schools quick off the bat

The Jersey Table Tennis Association has acquired 18 new table tennis tables thanks to funding from the One Foundation and ESC. The Jersey Table Tennis Association required the new tables for hosting the International Primary and Secondary Schools' tournaments being held in the Island in 2014 and 2017 respectively and the Senior Six Nations in 2016 as well as the general training, development, schools' use and league and other tournament matches as well as general community use. The tables will also be used in the NatWest Island Games which will be held in Jersey in 2015.

The Jersey Table Tennis Association is also keen to establish 'Ping' tournaments in St. Helier. This initiative will see table tennis tables placed in an outdoor area in town at lunchtime. The general public are encouraged to come and have a go at the sport and coaches will be on hand to give demonstrations and basic training. Further information on this scheme will be advertised in the media over the summer months.

The schools that have received tables are – Samares, St Clement's, JCG Prep, Rouge Bouillion, Haute Vallee, Bel Royal, St Peter's and La Moye.

MISCELLANEOUS?

SO HONESTY IS THE BEST POLICY

An internet campaign to reward a homeless man who returned a Diamond engagement ring to a woman (Sarah Darling) after it fell into his cup as she gave him some change, has raised more than £100,000. The donation page GiveForward.com was set up by Bill Krejic, the fiancé of Sarah Darling who was touched by Mr Harris' kindness. Mr Harris, who usually sleeps under a bridge, said a distraught Ms Darling returned to him two days later after failing to find him the previous day. Luckily, Mr Harris had kept a tight grip on the ring, in the hope of giving it back to its rightful owner. He said that his upbringing helped him to do the right thing: 'My grandfather was a reverend. He raised me from the time I was six months old and I thank the good Lord he did'.

BARKING MAD

Police officers in the West Midlands could be in the dog house after a police dog apparently filed a witness statement. The brief statement, on behalf of police dog Peach, read: 'I chase him. I bite him. Bad man. He tasty. Good boy. Good boy Peach', conveniently signed at the bottom with a print of the Alsatian's pawmark. It was reportedly written in response to a barrage of requests from the Crown Prosecution Service for an account from PC Peach on a crime, despite officers continually telling the CPS that Peach was a dog.

THE GRASS IS GREENER ON THE OTHER SIDE

Potty officials tried to put a spring in the step of locals in southern China - by secretly painting their grass green overnight. The bright green lawns were created by Town Hall gardeners in a bid to make residents "more cheerful and productive". However, the hoax was discovered after 'the paint came off' on peoples' shoes, with local He Wan saying 'what kind of fool tried to beat nature like this?' Red-faced local officials admit they did paint the lawns, but claim special nutrients in the tint will help the grass grow. 'People feel more positive, cheerful and productive when Spring is here and everything is green and new' explained a spokesman.

RATION YOUR CHEESE!

Bad weather resulted in the production of Mild cheddar cheese, from Guernsey Dairy, being suspended, but we're happy to report it will return to our shelves before the end of March, Managers say. Production stopped back in November because of a shortage of milk in Guernsey. Bad weather hit local dairy farmers hard in 2012 and resulted in a significant drop in the quantity of milk being produced. The shortage even led to some milk having to be brought in from Jersey to meet demand, shocking! Mild cheddar - which takes around three months to produce - has been in short supply ever since. Guernsey Dairy said that production began again at the beginning of 2013 and mild cheddar should be back on the shelves

Police in San Diego believe two burglars who stole a jukebox from a Hooters restaurant thought it was a cash machine (seriously?). The dopey duo tried to back a pick-up truck through the glass door and into the restaurant, but when they discovered the door opening wasn't big enough for the truck, they simply towed the jukebox outside, lifted it into the truck and drove away. The suspects, believed to be two males in their late teens or 20s, got away with the jukebox, but police believe it wasn't their intended haul, saying that the duo 'may have confused the jukebox with an ATM machine'. Steve Price, a regular at the restaurant, said: "Maybe with all the drinks and all the 'hooters' going around, their brains were just not thinking straight."

TRAVEL

Those who can, teach too, words I VIV PALLOT

CLARKSON, HAMMOND AND MAY HAVE ANOTHER REASON TO FEEL PROUD: TOP GEAR ISN'T JUST FOR PETROL HEADS; IT INSPIRES TRAVELLERS TOO! SO MUCH SO, THAT IF 24-YEAR OLD SOPHIE RENOUF HADN'T WATCHED THE SPECIAL FEATURE ON VIETNAM BACK IN DECEMBER 2008, SHE PROBABLY WOULDN'T BE LIVING IN HO CHI MINH CITY RIGHT NOW.

As it was, Sophie was riveted by footage of the TV trio on their madcap eight-day foray through Vietnam, a feat - the BBC website quips - the US military failed to achieve in ten years.

Moreover, the TV presenters were completely awestruck by the breathtaking scenery along the way, particularly up in the mountains where they stood mesmerised by the vista that swept far below them toward the coastline.

With a geography that varies enormously, Vietnam dangles from China like a length of crumpled ribbon, with Laos and Cambodia on the west, and the South China Sea lapping the eastern coastline and southern tip.

Although the Top Gear team used motorbikes for their trip from Ho Chi Minh in the south right up to near Hanoi, the 2,000km journey is one that Sophie plans to do herself in April, but from north to south. On a bicycle! This determined young woman is selfless when it comes to charity work. This time she is raising funds for Saigon's Children's Charity benefitting the 37% of Vietnamese children living in poverty.*

BUT FIRST, HOW HAS THE JERSEY GIRL FROM ST BRELADE ADJUSTED TO LIVING IN HO CHI MINH?

"It's such a crazy city! "Sophie declares of the former Saigon, "It's noisy, hectic, crowded, polluted, and it's easy to dismiss because of those reasons. It's also hot here - not in a nice way like summer in Jersey - but in a muggy, cloudy-but-hot way. Trying to get anywhere in rush hour is a pain because bikes and motorbikes are everywhere. When I easily Sophie found work in Vietnam...

"There's a high demand for English teachers here and a large expat community, which makes it a lively and vibrant place to teach", she says. "It's fairly easy to get a job and relatively well paid. I arrived and sent off my C.V. to a few places and within a week I had two interviews and was offered both jobs. I've met people here who run their own businesses and I have a friend who works in advertising, so there are lots of opportunities for expats over here."

DOES SHE GET ANY TIME OFF TO EXPLORE THE COUNTRY?

"I work weekends teaching young children at a private school outside of the regular school hours, so my first got here, I felt like I was cheating death every time I crossed the road!"

Obviously, there are advantages to living there, not least the low cost of living. Sophie tells me, "I live in a lovely, modern apartment for just £170 a month. You can also get clothes tailor-made here very cheaply - which was very useful when I first arrived and needed smart clothes for work. There are amazing restaurants, markets and street food. And beer is only thirty pence."

With Sophie's degree in History and Law from Exeter University, and her TESOL qualification (teaching English to foreigners) from St. Brelade's College, I wondered how weekdays give me plenty of time to explore", she says. "Weekends are crazy though because I work 14-hour days. I'm the opposite to all my friends at home; Monday morning is the best time of the week and I dread Saturday mornings!"

So far, however, she has managed to explore much of the city and is always keen to follow up recommendations to new restaurants and bars. In a sprawling metropolis with over 7 million inhabitants, it's hardly surprising that Sophie gets lost on a regular basis. Communication is a stumbling block as not everyone speaks English. And Vietnamese is a notoriously difficult language to learn, as Sophie soon discovered.

了 | gallery JERSEY'S STYLE MAGAZINE

Slightly further afield, Sophie recently chilled out on Cambodia's Ko Rong island with its beautiful beaches. "I can travel to Cambodia for around $20," she explains, "You can also go to Thailand, Laos, the Philippines and Indonesia for reasonable prices, which is amazing compared to Jersey where it's fairly expensive just to get to London!"

Sophie misses her friends and family in Jersey but definitely not the cold weather - with the exception perhaps of Christmas by the fireside. She has successfully avoided three consecutive winters in Jersey by working as an intern at a law firm in Beijing, teaching English in northern Sumatra as well as qualifying as a diving instructor and teaching on the Honduran island of Utila.

SO WHAT LIES AHEAD FOR THE INTREPID GIRL FROM JERSEY, CHANNEL ISLANDS?

"Everywhere I go I meet people who make me want to go to different places", she admits. "I want to keep on travelling ..." And with her "can do" attitude, there's no doubt Sophie will go far in this world.

HOLIDAYS OUTSIDE DEMOCRACY

WORDS: GRACE RYAN

The theme of this month's issue is 1984, which is either based around George Orwell's timeless story of love and betrayal under a totalitarian regime, or the year in which George Michael first released school disco slow-dance classic Careless Whisper.

Maybe it'll be a bit of both, like Saddam Hussain playing a mournful saxophone whilst Pol Pot is crying in the nightclub toilets because his girlfriend ran off with General Pinochet. Well, you don't need me to tell you about holidays where you can hear Careless Whisper, as there's a whole coast of Spain for that, so instead I've composed this piece in the spirit of the other George, showcasing those out-of-the-way destinations where a careless whisper could lead to a much longer stay than you'd anticipated.

Now it's true that many of these places lack the creature comforts that many travellers are used to, but that's not to say they don't have their own unique charms. Many of them are off the beaten track (perhaps because they tend not to keep track of beatings) and you'll truly be a travelling pioneer in enjoying their closely-monitored amenities and insane monuments to dictatorial power. The best thing is that you don't have to worry about missing a thing, as it's highly likely that your every movement will be recorded by a secret policeman in an ill-fitting polyester suit. It's a shame they're all so far away, although I suspect it'll only take a few more years of austerity before Greece and Italy are once again under the control of men with moustaches and silly hats and we have a sort of fascist Eurodisney of our very own. Until then, fly away, my pretties...

CHINA

The small-scale, boutique oppression offered by countries like Cuba and Singapore isn't for everybody, and some holidaymakers will prefer a country that represses its people in the grand, traditional fashion. If you agree then there's really only one destination for you, and that's the People's Republic of China. Home to almost a fifth of the global population, China is a vast land of enormous geographic diversity, from the majestic Karst mountains of Yangshuo, the tranquil valley of Jiuzhaigou to the haunting emptiness of the forbidden city of Beijing. There's so much to do across this huge nation that you'll struggle to plan your itinerary, if only because Google is banned and so attempts to access email or Facebook will lead to a squad of goons kicking down the door to your hotel room. China is struggling to modernise, but the good news is that this is more economic than rights-based, and you'll find that old-fashioned bribery still goes hand-in-hand with a contempt for democracy and a population of political prisoners large enough to fill most of western Europe.

NORTH KOREA

China has so much to offer the traveller in search of repression, but in recent years some people have felt that its modernisation programme has lost a lot of what made the PRC such an utterly terrifying place under Chairman Mao and his murderous gang of political zealots. Those people should book a flight to North Korea, a country where the only modernisation programme is in the private playrooms of its hereditary leadership. This tiny, paranoid nation stands preserved in amber as a charming museum of everything that was completely bonkers about fiftiesstyle totalitarian pseudo-Marxism, by which I mean everybody is depressed and hungry, nothing works properly and there are a million rules, none of which make sense. The food is grey, the people are terrified and a dictator who died in 1994 is technically still president. Attractions include a recently-discovered unicorn lair, spontaneous declarations of national pride whenever you happen to 'bump into' English-speaking residents and a theme park that wouldn't have passed health and safety in the Soviet Union. You'll never forget your time in North Korea, especially as they have an unfortunate tendency to kidnap visitors and subject them to decades-long brainwashing.

CUBA

For those holiday makers who'd like to dip a toe in the world of oppressive package tours, but maybe aren't sure that full-on human rights abuses are right for them, I always advise to start with the beautiful land of Cuba. In many ways, Cuba is the acceptable face of non-democracy, as it's easy to appreciate fifty years as a one-party state when you look at the numerous attempts by their powerful freedom-lovin' American neighbour to destroy their socialist economy and assassinate bearded father of the nation, Fidel Castro, with cigars dipped in LSD. The end product is a unique brand of sunny, tropical oppression, nourished with hearty national dish ropa vieja and soundtracked by Buena Vista Social Club. Yes, journalists are occasionally imprisoned, corruption is endemic, prostitution is widespread; but Cuba has gorgeous beaches, historic architecture and its inhabitants enjoy free hospital care and university education. They're friendly, welcoming people, eager to teach visitors about their thriving culture and proud history, and occasionally to seek political asylum in your suitcase.

SINGAPORE

As a total contrast to Cuba, you should consider a holiday with 'the strict man of Asia', the shining city-state of Singapore. Best described as 'sort of a democracy, depending on who you ask, and whether they think anybody is listening', Singapore is proud to show the world what you can achieve under a draconian capitalist system. You'll marvel at the sights of this clean, modern nation and its diverse blend of slightly-oppressed inhabitants. Singaporean culture is rich in culinary and artistic influences from neighbours China, Malaysia and India, as well as Britain, its former colonial overlord. They've worked together to create a modern economy that's high on international finance, has boutique shops and world-class restaurants, but is maybe a bit deficient on the old essential freedoms. You can enjoy spotless buildings, art and high culture and wonderful food, just make sure you don't drop your chewing gum in the street or you'll probably be lashed.

DREAM DESTINATION

VIV PALLOT spoke with FIONA FOYLE, Sales Advisor at Dunell's Premier Wines.

If you could go anywhere in the world, where would it be?

The Galápagos Islands because I love Nature! I'm fascinated by plants and animals and the way everything interacts together. And the Galápagos Islands are an intensified example of that.

The volcanic Galápagos Islands lie in the Pacific Ocean 600 miles off the west coast of Ecuador. Tourism is limited to this UNESCO World Heritage Site to protect the unique wildlife, such as the giant tortoises observed by Charles Darwin.

Have you ever seen animals in the wild?

We went to Kanha Tiger Reserve in central India but didn't see any tigers - only footprints. My partner, Andy, and I joked about our tour leader having a gadget on the end of his walking pole making tiger prints! Eventually we saw tigers at Ranthambore National Park in northern India - other people hired private transport and didn't see any, but we spotted them from a basic government Jeep!

Any other wild animals during your travels?

Yes, we camped overnight at Kruger National Park in South Africa and got quite close to some wildebeest and elephants. In fact, a herd of elephants crossed the track right in front of us and a baby one suddenly started charging towards us, making hooty trumpeting noises! The zebras let us get really close to them as we were on horseback at the time. And we saw giraffes and lions in the distance.

Was it dangerous at all?

Well, on night safaris you have to sign a disclaimer and list your next-of-kin! The leaders are all armed with rifles, of course.

There were signs everywhere warning, "Beware of the Hippos". But ostriches are surprisingly dangerous too. Did you know that if he feels threatened, an adult male can raise his hoof and disembowel a person?

Eew! You had no bad encounters, I hope?

Actually, I got up close and personal to a crocodile in Swaziland! It was on a walk from our Backpackers Lodge to the National Park when I suddenly spotted a small croc in the undergrowth ahead. I thought to myself: If that's a small one then there's got to be a Mum nearby...

Adrenaline instantly kicked in; it was a real fight-or-flight situation. I shouted to Andy, "RUN!!" I just wanted to keep on running and running! We spent the rest of the afternoon in a state of shock, sitting in a canteen, completely unable to move. A bit scary!

Just a bit! Moving on, what would it take for you to go to the Galápagos Islands?

A lottery win?

WE RECOMMEND...

Relatively unknown Moscow based Photographer Murad Osmann leapt into the global consciousness last month after his collection of pictures, all featuring his girlfriend leading him around the world by the hand, went viral on the internet. The cool instagram style snaps feature some of the worlds' best known tourist spots and his beautiful girlfriend, Nataly Zakharova's, rather nice (often scantily clad) behind!

Offer is for travel before 15 May, subject to availability.

THE CITY, SLICKER

Flying over to London to get off the rock is something we all have to do, or certainly want to do as often as possible. But sometimes it can be a full on mission just to leave the airport. Who else remembers the bygone years when you could rock up minutes before your plane was due to depart without any form of photographic ID.

You could still carry a full sized can of deodorant and you didn't need to worry about removing your laptop from its cover before it's unceremoniously shoved through the high-tech scanning device at the airport. In fact, 'back in the day' we didn't have any need to take our electronic lives with us.

For the majority of us we're happy to say that times have changed, give or take the ridiculously lengthy security checks we now have to endure. Not only do we now have access to the expanding network of airline routes, which now include excellent European destinations as well as the multiple airports in the UK, but we also get rewarded when we travel...Who else has signed up to the BA executive scheme, Flybe Rewards 4 All scheme? I'm sure we all have, it's nice to know you're getting something back, especially as these days you seem to be charged for every single component of your travel, eventually you'll have to pay for your laptop to travel in its own seat and probably cross your legs for the duration of your flight, unless you want to pay to use the on-board toilet.

Once you've completed the mandatory amount of return flights, some times as many as 12, you're eligible to book your 'reward' flight, only to be hit with a cost not dissimilar to the advertised rate of the lowest fare. It's almost as disappointing as having spent months collecting tokens from the back of cornflake packets for a McDonalds Big Mac Meal as a child in the 1980's, only to find out that you're too late and the offer is over...Damn you Kelloggs.

But there is a light at the end of the tunnel... There's one scheme where free, really does mean free. Blue Islands don't just offer you access to their comfortable lounge at Jersey Airport, where you can access as many Bourbon biscuits as you like, but they also give you Bonus Blue points every time you travel. When you've accrued enough points you can go online and book your free flight, and I mean really free, no hidden baggage costs, no paying for taxes, no extra charge to use the toilet, no extra leg room charge, just your name on a ticket to any one of their multiple destinations. The only catch...you have to register for a bonus blue account and make sure you book all your Blue Islands flights through this, not exactly a hardship is it? That's a hoop I'd be happy to jump through.

SAFETY

I'd say that Blue Islands seem to have hit the perfect balance for modern air passengers who remember what it was like to fly many moons ago. If at first a flight seems a little more expensive it's worth remembering all of the benefits, you basically get BA's Business Class service but without the massively inflated price tag. Not only do you get refreshments before you board, followed by a great on-board service, which extends to a full free bar service in the evenings, but you also land in the heart of the city of London.

You could still carry a full sized can of deodorant and you didn't need to worry about removing your laptop from its cover before it's unceremoniously shoved through the high-tech scanning device at the airport. In fact, 'back in the day' we didn't have any need to take our electronic lives with us

You're just 10 short minutes from plane to train, give or take your baggage collection, or you can jump in to one of the many taxis that await arriving passengers, and there are tube and bus options too, you can even buy your Oyster card on-board. What more could you want? Oh I know, how about access to free - yes, that's right - free WIFI when you are awaiting your return to the Island, that coupled with numerous points where you can plug in your all important laptop seems to make London City the airport of choice.

SIX OF THE BEST:

CINEMA DYSTOPIA

This month's Gallery theme is '1984', and in tribute to the definitive study on totalitarian dystopia, we're taking a look at some of the best dystopian depictions seen on the silver screen. People have obsessed over the idea of an end of all things since we were scrabbling about in loincloths and our apocalyptic fears have manifested themselves in many ways, whether it be the biblical Four Horsemen bringing fire and brimstone, H.G Wells' vision of malevolent aliens, countless films, novels and TV shows predicting a nuclear doomsday, George A Romero's zombies or our more modern fixation with cataclysmic natural disasters leveling humanity.

The post-apocalyptic world, however, is one that writers and filmmakers have taken great delight in putting on screen; as well as holding up a mirror to society and the direction in which we may be heading, it's also a darn good excuse to create worlds decorated with burnt out cars, street punks, psychopathic biker gangs and evil faceless government regimes. It's worth pointing out that this list was boiled down from nearly a hundred that could just as easily have been included, so this is not an exhaustive rundown. Feel free to discuss your favourite dystopian movies, post-apocalyptic and otherwise, at your leisure.

ROBOCOP

(Dir. Paul Verhoeven, 1987)

As well as being a rollicking sci-fi romp of a movie, Paul Verhoeven's gritty 1987 thriller is one of the most darkly funny satires on capitalism, privatization and corruption ever put to screen. It tells the tale of murdered police officer Alex Murphy, who is revived by the evil corporation OCP as Robocop, a near-indestructible Judge Dredd-style cyborg copper. In the hands of another director Robocop could have been just a standard sci-fi thriller with explosions, car chases and all the bells and whistles but not necessarily much to sink your teeth into. Which would have been perfectly fine, but in the hands of Verheoven, it becomes a biting commentary on totalitarianism, and as with all of the best Verhoeven movies, it's the details that paint such a rich world. The film begins with a news story about the end of apartheid - a forecasting of the end of white suppression that becomes a prevalent theme in the film. There's a TV commercial advertising an ultraviolent children's game called 'Nukem!' with its tagline "Get them before they get you!' a blatant nod to the paranoia and absurdity of the Cold War. It also quite accurately predicted a Detroit in economic and physical ruin. Hilarious, thrilling and terrifying in equal

MAD MAX (Dir. George Miller, 1979)

The film that defined the archetypal postapocalyptic aesthetic, and the one that launched the career of Mel Gibson: Mel plays Max, a highway patrol officer in a postapocalyptic world ravaged by the depletion of oil and the subsequent breakdown in social order. Max's Australia is one plagued by murderous gangs, one in particular, The Toecutters, who prove to be his arch nemeses. A low-budget picture, the film divided opinion on its release, and its nihilistic, brutal worldview certainly doesn't chime with everyone even now, but its depiction of a dusty, decayed and sleazy world - think Star Wars' Mos Eisley spaceport for grownups - made it a cult classic and it spawned two higher-budget and arguably superior sequels, culminating with the bonkers Beyond Thunderdome. Weirdly, director George Miller went on to direct Babe 2: Pig in the City and the Happy Feet movies. He's evidently had enough of cute and cuddly talking animals as he's gone back to his roots as director of the new Max reboot with Tom Hardy as the titular badass.

CHILDREN OF MEN (Dir. Alfonso Cuaron, 2006)

Based on P.D James' 1992 novel, Children of Men was directed by Alfonso Cuaron (he of Prisoner of Azkaban, by far the best Potter film), who brought to the screen a gritty, bleak but totally plausible vision of a future society torn apart by the revelation that humans can no longer reproduce - not so much a post-apocalyptic world, but a world in the midst of a slow, creeping apocalypse. It's the mundane details that root the film in reality, and eschewing the common tendency for dystopian sci-fi to revel in creating hyperreal futures, Cuaron's movie presents a 2027 Britain with small, simple but significant tweaks to the world we see today - where other films envision flying cars zipping up and down invisible aerial highways, Children of Men's decaying London is dotted with the same cars and buses seen on the roads today, albeit somewhat tattier. Michael Caine's character anchors the story in the past (our present); an ageing hippy with a penchant for weed and ear-splitting spasmodic dance music, he's exactly what you imagine some of today's young adults growing into in later life. Its stark colour-pallete, low-key musical score and fastpaced war reporting-style camerawork give the film a sense of chaos, bleakness and unnerving morbidity that all dystopian movies aspire to, but very few achieve.

IDIOCRACY (Dir. Mike Judge, 2006)

Not a masterpiece by any stretch of the imagination, but Mike Judge's 2006 comedy is included for its sense of fun and sheer ridiculousness. Like Judge's Office Space before it, Idiocracy is a critique of modern society, this time on the dumbing down of mass media, and is frankly as subtle as a sledgehammer in both its satirical content and its laughs. Luke Wilson is cryogenically frozen in a military experiment, intended to be revived after a year. Instead, he awakes in 2505 in an America whose inhabitants have become so stupid that the place has gone to pot. Waste is piled so high (due to an inability to figure out what to do with the stuff) that trash avalanches are a regular occurrence, crops won't grow because they're being watered with Gatorade, its president is a gun-toting ex-professional wrestler and the most recent Oscar-winning film, we learn, is a single shot of a man's backside periodically dropping one over the course of ninety minutes. The movie kind of has its cake and eats it - there are crude fart and naughty bit gags left, right and centre and whilst we're meant to revolt at the prospect of our world turning into this, we're not entirely discouraged from laughing out loud along with the dummies on-screen. Still, it contains some decent laughs and does its job, sending up a western world which increasingly is more interested in Youtube videos of cats wearing party hats than it is in science, culture or any of that boring stuff.

(Dir. Terry Gilliam, 1985)

Arguably as fine a critique on totalitarianism and bureaucracy as 1984 or Kafka's The Trial, Terry Gilliam's 1985 masterpiece is the perfect vehicle for the former Python's fantastical imagination and surrealist humour. Jonathan Pryce's protagonist sets about trying to rectify an administrative error caused by a fly contaminating a printer, which has resulted in death of an Archibald Buttle, rather than the intended target Archibald Tuttle, portrayed in a brilliant cameo by Robert De Niro. Brazil paints a picture of a world over-reliant on not only bureaucracy but shoddy machinery which is constantly breaking down - a world suffocated by inherently absurd rules and regulations. Like all great movie dystopias, it holds a mirror up to the real world but with Gilliam's trademark flights of fancy, this mirror's just a little bit wonky.

PLANET OF THE APES (Dir. Franklin J Schaffner, 1968)

Anyone who's seen Planet of the Apes will know that it's a bit of a plot spoiler to describe the film as a story of a dystopian Earth, but no more than the honking great big spoiler on the movie poster, which shows Charlton Heston in the shadow of a Statue of Liberty submerged up to its head in sand. The film tells the tale of a group of astronauts who crash land on a strange, hostile and ostensibly alien planet inhabited by a society of intellectually advanced apes who rule over a subserviant class of humans. It's a sci-fi classic, a terrifying 'what if?' movie that highlights both humanity's fragile position in the order of things and the arrogance of our presumed superiority over our surroundings. It spawned a series of clunkingly bad sequels as well as pretty iffy remake by Tim Burton with Marky Mark in the Heston role, and it took until 2011 for a satisfying reboot to come along, to which sequels beckon.

BIG BROTHER IS WATCHING YOU

When George Orwell published 1984 back in 1949, his novel was lauded as a terrifying portrait of a totalitarian world ruled by a malevolent faceless government, whose citizens lived bleak existences stifled by rules, bureaucracy, paranoia and surveillance.

In the years that have passed since its publication, we've come to appreciate the prophetic nature of 1984 and many a dystopian novel and movie have followed in its footsteps, accurately predicting political, cultural or technological changes to the world we live in. So, has the nightmare world that Orwell predicted finally caught up with us? Take a look at some of these and decide for yourself...

CCTV / SURVEILLANCE - 1984

There's a brilliantly illustrative (but sadly, doctored) photo doing the rounds online at the moment of George Orwell's former home with its English Heritage blue plaque fixed to the wall, a few inches from which is a camera mounted to a post and a sign reading '24 Hour CCTV in Operation.' The photo may be a fake, but the reality isn't so far detached from that, with a newspaper reporting a few years back that Orwell's house has 32 CCTV cameras within 200 yards of it. Surveillance and its dehumanising effects were a prominent theme in 1984, with its world's inhabitants surrounded by hidden microphones and 'two-way telescreens' in their homes and places of work. It's no secret that the modern world is one in which practically our every move is viewed and recorded, with a staggering 4.2 million CCTV cameras in the UK alone. That's one for every 14 people. In the US, Homeland Security monitors social media for subversive buzzwords and a British tourist was arrested for Tweeting the words 'destroy America' in 2012. The increasing amount of personal information we put online and the huge amounts of time we spend on the Internet means that the chances are you're sat next to one of Orwell's two-way telescreens right now.

AUTONOMOUS KILLING MACHINES - THE TERMINATOR

On many levels James Cameron's Terminator films were completely preposterous – as a rule, more so as the series progressed. However, in those flashback/forward scenes of a post-apocalyptic America torn apart by a nuclear winter, we see flying robots called 'Hunter Killers' doing just that: hunting, killing, with big old laser cannons its weapon of choice, picking off any humans it can find. We may not be quite there just yet, but with remotely-piloted drones playing a huge role in America's 'War on Terror', particularly in Pakistan and Afghanistan, a whole ethical can of worms has been opened; is there any honour in combat for a drone pilot 7,500 miles away from the battlefield? If soldiers are increasingly being taken out of the equation and conflicts are being fought between dots on a screen, is the 'horror of war' deterrent redundant? Worryingly, the next logical step in the evolution of drone technology seems to be the implementation of AI technology. The US recently tested the X-47B, an unmanned aircraft which, once operational, will be able to carry out preprogrammed missions at the click of a button. If that's not a scary development, what is?

GLOBALISATION - 1984

In 1984, the world is divided into three states: Oceania, covering North and South America, Britain and Southern Africa; Eurasia, comprised of continental Europe and Russian; East Asia – Japan, Korea and China; the Disputed Zone, covering North Africa, the Middle East and India. The exact world map that Orwell envisioned might not be 100% accurate, but the fact that the world has become increasingly connected is undisputable. Due to cheap air travel, global media and the Internet, the world in 2012 seems a much smaller place than it did back when Orwell was penning 1984. With China emerging as the next dominant superpower, relations between Europe and the US becoming increasingly strained, and the Middle East in as much political turmoil as ever – the title 'disputed' is certainly apt – Orwell might just have been on to something.

CYBORG TECHNOLOGY - ROBOCOP

The idea of cybernetic organisms is one that has fascinated us throughout the industrial and technological ages, and provided a platform for many a writer to explore ethical and philosophical questions: what does it mean to be human? Where does the line between artificial and organic fall? At what point does our reliance on technology spill over into over-dependence? The likes of Robocop, Terminator and many more pose these questions but even their writers surely couldn't have anticipated the speed at which cyborg technology would advance. We're at a point now where breakthroughs in neuroscience and engineering have resulted in successful tests on mechanical prosthetic limbs controlled by the power of the mind, in subjects whose brains have been wired up to electrodes. Scientists are working on artificial eyes containing cameras that can relay images back to the brain. Google are about to launch Google Glass, a pair of spectacles that present the world as augmented reality, with users able to access the web with a flick of the head. Give it ten years and I reckon centeniers will have been replaced with Robocops.

PREEMPTIVE CRIME DETECTION - MINORITY REPORT

Sci-fi author Philip K Dick was a master when it came to weaving tales involving authoritarian governments, conspiracy, suspicion and paranoia, and his 1956 short story - later turned into the blockbuster movie by Steven Spielberg - was a perfect example. In it, psychic law enforcers are able to foresee the future and prevent crimes before they've happened. The story throws up questions about free will, determinism and governmental control, and has become all the more pertinent in a post 9/11-world in which increased governmental powers have allowed suspected terrorists to be detained without trial or legal counsel on the most spurious of evidence, and in which our online activity is monitored (see 'Surveillance') to spot subversive language. In 2007 IBM in fact worked with Memphis Police Department to create predictive software to identify and analyse geographical trends and forecast potential crime hotspots. More recently, Professor Richard Berk of the University of Pennsylvania has developed crime prediction software using algorithms to determine which recently released prisoners are most likely to commit murder and therefore require a close eye to kept on them. It's already being used in Maryland and Pennsylvania and is soon to be implemented in Washington. If it's prone to error, that could cause all sorts of problems, surely?

MEMORY IMPLANTS - TOTAL RECALL

In his short story We Can Remember It For You Wholesale, Philip K Dick once again showed his ability for spookily accurate predictions. The story was the basis for the Arnie-fronted sci-fi thriller Total Recall, in which artificial memories can be implanted into people's minds. In 2011 the first steps towards making this a reality were taken with the publication of a study by Theodore Berger of the University of Southern California, in which a microchip implanted into a rat's brain was able to successfully mimic the hippocampus, the area of the brain responsible for storing long-term memory. By recording the patterns of brain activity present during the simple task of pressing a lever to dispense water from a feeder, and replicating them in the microchip, Berger's team were able to demonstrate that rats were able to encode memory of the activity in the chip even when the area of their brain responsible for memory had been blocked with drugs. With advances in neuroscience making it possible to record and use electrical patterns in the brain involved with more complex tasks like controlling mechanical limbs (see 'Cyborgs'), it seems that the principal technology is there to one day be able to have activities stored on chips and uploaded directly to your noggin. SO, WHEN IT COMES TO THINKING ABOUT SOMETHING ELSE TO WRITE THAT MIGHT INTEREST OTHER PEOPLE, I FIND MYSELF WONDERING HOW I CAN INFORM AND EDUCATE RATHER THAN JUST SPOUT NONSENSE

I thought it would be an interesting idea to pick the brains of my mainland peers in order to find out their opinions about lovely Jersey.

Let's get some negatives out of the way by mentioning Leah McGrath Goodman and that interview she did on Russia Today, bless her heart. She very cleverly combined Jersey's tax haven status with a pinch of malicious rumour and some slugs/snails/puppy dogs' tails to concoct an idea of an Island that, quite frankly, would only exist in a bad Tim Burton film. If she wants to investigate into areas that are perhaps slightly sheltered by the powers that be, that's absolutely fine, but I think we can all agree that insulting us along the way is almost as bad as being locked up in this impenetrable fortress we call home. #freeJersey.

Right. So I asked my girlfriend's mum to describe Jersey in 3 words, and she said 'warm, knitted pullover', because she thinks she's funny. That was no help, so I asked somebody else who, without hesitation, shouted 'Jersey Royals!', which was nice. She did elaborate though, as I explained that shouting out types of vegetable would get you nowhere in life. She then replied with 'Jersey is a little island with sandy beaches where British people go for a short break'. That's lovely, I like that description. I mean, obviously British people aren't the only people who come here for a break, the German forces popped over in 1940 for a few years, and I'm sure they had a lovely time!

I think it's interesting that the majority of what the younger generations know about Jersev is from our students who travel far and wide (sometimes even to Scotland) to attend university. During my undergrad days I was lucky enough to avoid being dubbed with the nickname 'Jersey', but I know of many people who didn't escape. Just like I didn't manage to escape the inevitable question 'Do you have cars in Jersey?' I think it's great publicity for us, to have thousands of students scatter around the globe each year to learn about things and stuff... because I also think it's their instinctive duty to preach the word of the island, educating those who do not know much about us. I even know of situations where people have never heard of the Jersey Cow, and the beautiful way in which it was explained to them: 'It's like a brown horse, but in the shape of a cow.'

I even know of situations where people have never heard of the Jersey Cow, and the beautiful way in which it was explained to them: 'It's like a brown horse, but in the shape of a cow.'

This was mainly for my own peace of mind, because I've been worrying about us, and the horrible things that have made national news in recent years. Upon telling somebody where I was from recently, they replied 'Isn't Jersey that Jimmy Carr place?' Poor Jimmy Carr didn't know what he was getting himself into...

HOMEGROWN SNOWBRAND

Last winter Claire Rondel's Hash' decided to design and make freestyle ski hoodies that were aimed at the kids getting gnarly in the park. They handmade them all, took them skiing and it turned out they could not make them quick enough to keep up with demand. This year they are back with a vengence and have moved production to Bali and below is the result! They have about 20 designs across 7 colours and the range is growing daily. They screen print all the hoodies themselves, so can have new graphics on them in a day. They limit production to 5 of any one design so you won't be wearing the same as the person flying through the pow beside you. Their moto is Limited Production, No Boundaries. The hoodies feature longer length for style on the slopes, thumb holes to keep your wrists nice and toasty, a conveniently positioned lift pass pocket for quick swipe and go action through the turnstyle and magnetised hood to back panel to keep it from flapping in your face when you are riding switch. In addition there's a water resistant iPhone pocket and headphone threading system and high button up front poppers to keep your neck snuggly on the lift.

M Missoni

We popped to Renaissance to lust over the latest M Missoni spring/summer collection. It is a wild, and very wonderful mix of exotic 40s seashore glam. The vibrant enchanting colours are luxurious and dazzling; it is a wonderfully refreshing collection compared to the same old nude palette which other companies are churning out. It is all also so flattering! We would rather like to own it all.

Love Molly

If you are heading away this
Easter then these cosy, cashmere

You can wear them in lots of different ways; cardigan, poncho, it all and comes in a fab range of colours. Ideal for keeping warm as

BY GEORGE

This month we have a special edition of our regular Trend News page as we were lucky enough to fly over to London and meet with one of the industry's biggest names in fashion trend spotting. Helen Low is Head of Design for George, her job involves travelling the world discovering the latest trends, which are then translated into the latest collections. They even produce a second, last minute additional collection once they have everything made, so that they can literally provide exactly what the customer is wanting and keep up with the ever changing trends. Helen guided our Fashion Editor Ceri Milner through some of the key trends for spring / summer 2013. All clothes pictured are available from George in Liberty Wharf.

WOMEN

Bright colours and tie dye are perfect for all the summer festivals. There is a focus on comfy, easy to wear pieces. Faded denim will again be prevailing. There is a big prairie vibe so delicate white lace details are casual but still pretty. 50s style swimwear is very flattering and that's what really counts when you have to bare all down the beach. Small patterns are also slimming so this tiger print one piece is very on trend.

MEN

The buzz words for 2013 are laid-back and natural. In menswear we are starting to see some more adventurous colours being popular such as red and burgundy. Graphic Tees aren't going anywhere and will be in demand again this year.

KIDS

Aztec print is something that will be everywhere, it is best done in small patches, as too much is overbearing. Simple bold colours are high impact and easy to pair. There is a luxe sporty vibe around at the moment, so dressing up little shorts is a good way to achieve this trend. Neon looks great when the sun is shining. All shades of neon will be prominent Diamonds are a natural substance, and no two gems are ever exactly alike. Every diamond is a one-off. Just like the woman who'll be wearing it.

When you're buying an engagement ring, you should really follow your heart. Of course, it's good to be prepared, and a knowledge of the 4Cs (colour, cut, carat and clarity) will help you understand each stone's particular appeal. But diamonds are special, and their value transcends simple statistics. At Hettich, their advice is always to book a private consultation where you can take a closer look at a whole range of diamond rings and see them sparkle for yourself. Because when you find the one, you'll just know.

To help you celebrate, Hettich have teamed up with Luxury Jersey Hotels to offer a romantic overnight stay to every couple purchasing an engagement ring valued at £3,000 or more. You choose the hotel you'd like to stay in, from The Atlantic Hotel, L'Horizon Hotel & Spa, Grand Jersey, The Royal Yacht, Hotel de France & Ayush Wellness Spa or The Club Hotel & Spa, and they'll send you there. So whether you're celebrating or proposing, you can make it unforgettable.

HOT ON THE TRAIL OF AN EPIC WELSH WIN IN THE 6-NATIONS RUGBY, RIVOLI JEWELLERS HAS TAKEN ON WELSH JEWELLERY BRAND, CLOGAU (PRONOUNCED CLOG-I). For nearly 20 years, Clogau has been producing the finest jewellery, containing a touch of rare Welsh gold. Born quite accidentally, due to a series of events, Clogau Gold is today a one-of-a-kind jewellery brand recognised for its originality, beauty and utmost quality.

Extraordinary Gold

In 1989, the Clogau St. David's gold mine was founded by William Roberts. William wished to re-open the mine as a tourist attraction, an idea that was overturned by the Snowdonia National Park. As a result, William decided to gamble on the idea that there would be more gold within the mine. Luckily, there was, and a few years worth of small scale mining began in 1992 where precious rose-coloured gold began to be extracted. To make best-use of this magnificent gold, William decided to use it to produce jewellery of the utmost beauty and quality, using Wales as the sole design inspiration. To begin with just 5 lines of jewellery were created. A number of contributing factors led to the closure of the mine in 1998. With no gold mining taking place in Wales today, Welsh gold supplies will eventually run out, making it possibly the rarest gold in the world.

The Gold of Royalty

Welsh gold is so precious that it has been used by Royalty since 1911. Clogau Gold includes a touch of this very same gold within each piece of its jewellery, creating an esteemed association with the British Royal Family. The British Royal Family has been using pure Welsh gold to create their wedding rings, since 1923. This tradition was founded by The Queen Mother, then Lady Elizabeth Bowes-Lyon, on her marriage to the Duke of York on 26th April, 1923. Other members of The Royal Family to have Welsh gold wedding rings include Princess Anne (1973), the late Princess Diana (1981), Prince Charles (1981 & 2005) and Camilla The Duchess of Cornwall (2005). Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth's very own wedding ring, from her marriage to The Duke of Edinburgh on 20th November 1947, is crafted from a nugget of pure Welsh gold from the Clogau St. David's mine.

The tradition of the British Royal Family using Welsh gold wedding rings was carried into its 88th year during the most recent Royal wedding of the Duke and Duchess of Cambridge on 29th April, 2011. It is a touch of this very same rare Welsh gold that is contained within each piece of Clogau Gold jewellery, making it some of the most exclusive jewellery in the world. The content of Welsh gold can be identified by the Welsh dragon stamp, and other unique marks that denote a genuine piece of Clogau Gold.

To celebrate the arrival, Rivoli Jewellers have an amazing launch offer; a free silver and rose gold Kensington pendant worth £129 if you spend £199 or more on Clogau jewellery in-store. For further details please contact Rivoli on 01534 601 930 or visit them at 41/43 King Street.

Our latest favourite wonder product is. *drum roll please....

The new Sisley Phyto-Cernes Eclat Eye Concealer.

We like to play hard and party hard at gallery HQ so this little gem is ideal as it improves dark circles by helping natural drainage and micro-circulation. As well as this is fights puffiness by reducing fatty build ups and improves the tone of cutaneous tissues. Resulting in hydrated skin, fine lines are visibly smoothed and signs of fatigue are reduced. Boom.

HAIR TREND MY LITTLE PONY

The latest trend that has made the transition from trendsetters on tumblr to the creme of the catwalk is pastel coloured hair. The dip-dyed, Crayola-hued dye job is here to stay and it's gaining celebrity kudos with Nicole Richie going partially neon pink, Nicki Minaj with her kaleidoscopic dos, Katy Perry and her signature

Smurf-blue coif, and Kelly Osbourne and her purple old-lady hair. Some girls are getting it right and look like otherworldly ethereal beauties and others are looking like rebellious goths. We think the key to this look is knowing that the person you're putting in charge of transforming your hair colour is a total pro.

APPETITE

CHEFSPFAK

As Jersey's longest standing Michelin Star restaurant, changes at Bohemia are always met with curiosity and intrigue by foodies on Island and beyond. With new head chef Steve Smith bringing his new style to the table we wanted to learn more., We sent Tom Innes to meet him

ALTHOUGH STEVE SMITH'S
NAME HAS RECENTLY BEEN
ONE OF JERSEY'S PREMIER RESTAURANTS, HIS FIRST
VISITS TO THE ISLAND HAD NO CONNECTION WITH FINE DINING.

Prior to becoming the new Head Chef at Bohemia in St Helier, Steve came to Jersey to see friends, and was determined to stay in holiday mode.

"It would be a bit of a busman's holiday to go round analysing restaurants," he points out. "We were here to see our friends and relax, and eating tended to be pretty informal - plenty of barbecues."

Steve was firmly back in work mode when he arrived at Bohemia in January, looking to stamp his mark on its already high reputation, which include a Michelin Star, one of just three in Jersey. It's a proud badge of honour for a top-drawer establishment, but Steve says he won't beat himself up in a bid to keep hold of it.

"I think if a chef was too obsessed with a Michelin star, his restaurant would probably go bankrupt because he would have forgotten to focus on the important things - we want to be creating food of a consistently high standard that we are happy with, and customers appreciate."

Steve speaks with the confidence of someone who has been among the elite since becoming, at 24, one of the youngest chefs to be awarded a Michelin Star. He has worked with leading names like Jean-Christophe Novelli and Paul Heathcote, and his CV includes a number of renowned establishments in the north of England and Australia.

And what of Steve's intentions at Bohemia? "I want to bring a fresh, modern approach, giving customers a fantastic evening with experiences they haven't had before. It will be very seasonal and produce-driven - hopefully by now we've seen the back of winter and can move from root vegetables to lighter produce - morels, asparagus, wild leeks and garlic, and of course Jersey Royals."

While wary of doing anything that might deflect from the true flavour of the Island's famous potato, Steve has some interesting ideas - his Jersey Royal pannacotta with oysters, oyster jelly and horseradish certainly indicates a willingness to push the boundaries in a bid to bring new experiences to the dining table.

Name: Steve Smith
Age: "30-something"
Born & brought up: Warwick Lives: On the outskirts of St Helier with his partner Ellen De Jager, (newlyappointed Pastry Chef at the Mark Jordan restaurant at the Atlantic Hotel), and their two cocker spaniels.
Unwinds: "Relaxing, normal stuff really:
riding my trail bike, having a couple of pints, playing squash, watching a bit of football."

LAYERS OF GOODNESS

words and images : Mae Gabriel

In keeping with the 80's theme of this month's edition and by popular demand, I jumped at the chance of cooking my favourite Ragu recipe and made a Lasagne. This is usually the kind of dish that comes to everyone's mind when friends are coming for dinner. Who doesn't like Lasagne...? It's tasty and very easy to make and can be prepared ahead, giving you plenty of quality time to spend with friends instead of the pots and pans.

INGREDIENTS

METHOD

Ragu

450g minced beef
3 tbsp olive oil
2 cloves garlic (minced)
1/2 large onion (finely chopped)
1 large carrot (peeled and grated)
2 large celery sticks (peeled and grated)
1 tbsp of chopped fresh oregano
1 tbsp tomato puree
1 x 400g tin chopped tomatoes
300ml red wine
50ml milk
freshly ground salt & pepper to taste

Cheese Sauce

25g butter 25g flour 300ml milk 65g medium cheddar cheese (grated) 35g parmesan cheese (finely grated) pinch of ground nutmeg 6 x lasagne sheets

Pre-heat oven to 200c fan assisted / gas mark 7.

To make the Ragu, heat the olive oil in a large sauce pan over a moderate heat. Fry the garlic until brown. Add the finely chopped onion, grated carrot and celery, fry until they have softened then make a well in the centre of the pan and add the minced beef (breaking the mince as you add to the pan using your hands or a wooden spoon). It is important that the meat is not in large clump so make sure the meat have separated finely. Allow the meat to brown, mix with the other ingredients in the pan, season with salt & pepper. Once the meat has browned, add the oregano, stir. Then add the tomato puree and stir thru making sure that the everything is coated and red in colour. Cook for a further 2-3 minutes. Add the wine and simmer for 3-5 minutes or until it has reduced slightly and the alcohol cooks off. Add the chopped tomatoes, stir and leave to simmer for 10 minutes (if the sauce starts to dry, add a little water while it simmers). Add the milk and stir thru. Turn off the heat and set aside.

Z. To make the cheese sauce, melt the butter in a sauce pan over a gentle heat. Add the flour and using a wooden spoon, stir to form a paste. Add a little of the milk at a time, whisking as you add to prevent any lumps forming. Season with salt & pepper and a pinch of ground nutmeg. Allow the sauce to cook for another minute. Add the grated cheddar cheese, stir in the sauce evenly and remove from heat.

3. Spoon half of the meat sauce into the bottom of a baking dish and place the first 3 pasta sheets on top. Pour half of the cheese sauce on top, spread evenly using a wooden spoon or spatula before adding the rest of the meat on top. Add the final layer of pasta sheets and pour over the remaining cheese sauce, spreading evenly. Finish with grated parmesan and a little seasoning of salt & pepper. Place in the oven for 20-25 minutes or until golden brown.

Serve while hot with a side salad and garlic bread to mop up the meaty sauce.

A NEW PLACE TO SEE AND BE SEEN

Finally the name is out and we can all look forward to the arrival of Shaun Rankin's new restaurant 'Ormer'! The restaurant and bar is due to open in May and promises sophistication and quality in the heart of St Helier.

The Don Street restaurant has been designed by one of London's most celebrated interior designers Martin Brudnizki. His work includes Soho Beach House Miami, Annabel's London, and Jamie's Italian.

To mark the new venture, Shaun has launched an apprentice scheme offering a life changing opportunity for two young Jersey people. He is looking for one front-of-house and one kitchen apprentice. The fortunate candidates will be awarded three years support and paid training under the wing of the celebrated chef. They will learn the trade, undergo professional certification at Highlands and then be placed in a position at the end of the scheme in a leading establishment. Shaun will be inviting applications for the roles up until 30th April. You can find more information at www.facebook.com/ormerjersey

Shaun Rankin, says: "Launching the apprentice scheme is really important to me, I hope to give two young stars some support and encourage people to consider hospitality as a career. I can't wait to reveal Ormer to all the people who have supported me in Jersey over the years. I'm very pleased to announce the name and so grateful for all the encouragement we are receiving – we already have pre-bookings up to January 2014!"

Two spoons, three pies. You do the math. Mmm.

PIE SAY

What do you do when you have a whole bunch of competitive chefs at your disposal and you like pie?

You set up a pie making competition and get like minded pie tasters to pick their favourite. It's a hard job on a cold winters evening, but someone's got to do it.

Each Randalls chef was asked to bake a savoury pie that wasn't currently on their menu. All 14 pies were lined up in a row and then devoured, one by one, washed down with some sturdy Skinners Ale.

Presentation, filling and pastry were all taken into account. It was a fairly close call. A particular favourite of mine was the Jersey Bean Crock pie (now if that doesn't warm your cockles I don't know what will!) In the end a scrumptious ' Miso Chicken and Suimeji Mushroom Pasty', cooked by Martyn Harvey, Head Chef of Blush, took the title and his pie was then featured as part of Pie Week, across Randalls eateries.

TODKA - A NEW VODKA ON THE BLOCK!

Todka is a deliciously smooth, toffee flavour Vodka that is increasingly becoming a widely recognised brand in the UK and beyond. Introduced to the Channel Isles in 2012 its popularity here has quickly spread. Convenience store chain SPAR has recently added Todka to their stores with other retail outlets looking likely to follow soon.

With a broad general appeal, Todka provides a tantalising choice of two delicious flavours – Toffee or Banoffee. Served over ice or drunk as a shot, it is highly versatile. Simply take a tall glass, some ice and Todka and use your imagination. Create cocktails such as espresso martinis or just add ginger beer, fruit juice, lemonade and sparkling wine. Cupcakes and many other cakes and desserts take on a new dimension when Todka is used as an ingredient. Drizzle over strawberries and ice cream; add to sticky toffee pudding, tiramisu, fruit crumbles, or banana splits. Create Todka crème brulee, chocolate & Todka cheesecake, Todka truffles or even Todka custard!

Todka has been featured on Alan Titchmarsh's and Alan Carr's TV programmes and is used in one of Nigela Lawson's cookery books, Nigella's Christmas where she creates an Espresso Martini using Todka.

Located in a select private close, with secure gated access, this spacious property has been reconfigured and extended to produce a stunning contemporary family residence, with emphasis on an outdoor lifestyle.

For those of you who live out West you'll already be converted, but for those considering the seemingly gargantuan leap from East to West you'll no doubt be enticed by the close proximity of the cosy fire at The Smugglers, or the beach stroll to the delicious delights that The Oyster Box has to offer. All that stands between this property and one of the prettiest beaches in the British Isles is a lovely grassland walk which the family dog will delight in running across.

The first thing that strikes you as you enter Brecon House is how light and spacious it is. Strategically designed as the perfect sun trap, as you stand admiring the view it is very easy to imagine the incredible sunsets you would experience living here.

The stunningly re-modelled accommodation has been completed to the very highest standard. Fittings include sleek, and rather sexy, pillarless sliding pocket doors, an amazing kitchen with a raft of integrated appliances and kitchenalia to boot.

The accommodation briefly comprises; a 34' kitchen and dining room, large reception room, study, three en-suite bedrooms on the ground floor with a further two on the first. House shower room and a utility and boot room also feature. Hardwood doors and skirtings have been used, top of the range bathrooms and the highest quality workmanship has been employed to deliver this very special home.

Outside the property there is a cedar wood garden chalet (read 'man cave') and Swim Spa. Surrounded by garden to three sides, part laid to lawn with a range of paved areas this is calling out for a bit of al fresco dining. Simply add your outdoor sound system and a BBQ that an Australian would be proud of and there wouldn't be much reason to ever go into the house itself when the sun is shining.

The property has a large gated courtyard parking with plenty of space for all the kids cars as they learn to drive, as well as space for all their friends' cars. Then you can hide your vehicles away in the integral double garage safe from first-time-driver prangs.

This is the first home we've seen which manages to be everything we dreamed of in our fanciful twenties, paired with all the practical necessities of running and entertaining a large family today.

Buying Property Together

words : Jonathan Dauny | Collas Crill

Collas Crill property expert Jonathan Dauny answers some of your most common home-buying questions.

There are two methods of buying a property jointly. Which is best for me?

Without wishing to sound too bleak, if you're happy for your home to automatically pass to your co-owner when you die, then "jointly for the survivor" is the option for you. However, in order to sell the property under this form of ownership both parties must agree and participate at the time of the future sale.

If you are both happy to own a certain share in your property which can be conveyed or left to any third party without the permission of the other then "tenants in common" may be a better choice.

Will I need an equity agreement, a co-habitation agreement or both?

This depends on how you will be purchasing and financially contributing towards your home. When buying property jointly in either fashion it would be sensible to agree on how all the contributed money will be divided in a future sale. If one person is financing the purchase more heavily than the other then an equity agreement will help to record the individual's personal wishes.

If you intend to borrow jointly with your partner to purchase your future home but only one party is permitted to legally acquire it due to a lack of Housing qualifications then a co-habitation agreement might be best for you. The agreements can also be combined to cover both eventualities.

If I'm buying freehold property will I need to attend at Court personally to buy my home?

Purchasing property is a proud moment and represents a pretty big outlay investment wise. It can be a fairly lengthy process too so if only for the satisfaction of witnessing its conclusion you might like to attend. The experience itself is also novel as its not everyday you buy a house and appear before Court swearing on oath. A member of your legal team will always been on hand to assist and guide you in Court.

If you can't attend on the day of completion then a Power of Attorney can be prepared for you to sign and this will allow you to authorise that person to appear on your behalf. Stamp duty of £60 is charged to register the Power of Attorney.

When we're on deadline at Gallery there is usually a lot of noise. People, phones, headphones, music, raised voices and dog barking. When you're trying to concentrate it's hard having your thought processes interrupted by third party noise.

This month we met Mark Shaw from Style Group. He's a man fascinated by sound, he's even got an app for it. You see workplace noise is a big issue. Today's modern open plan office environments are great for paper aeroplanes and spying on people but not for trying to have an important private conversation. The bigger the business and the more confidential the subject matter the more pertinent the issue of acoustics becomes. Our cubic offices with glass partitions ensure our voices are bounced around all over. A clap can echo around a room for seconds rather than dissipating. Each second that noise interrupts your day is one you're not working well and as comfortably as you should. Now extrapolate that out to a whole organisation.

Mark's interest was bolstered by the identification of a partner in the UK that makes sound absorbing solutions. When a local law firm's client had complained that their offices were not conducive to confidential meetings, it meant these new solutions were the perfect option, enabling the firm to maintain the open plan space but not worry about confidential words travelling further than they should.

Ironically it's the fact that we're making things quieter that is part of the problem. As our ambient noise levels become lower with quieter air conditioning units and better sound insulation, the ability for our individual voices to interrupt is made easier. An office is generally 60db (decibels of sound), rising to 80db if there are lots of heightened voices. If you were working on a building site with noise at that level then you'd be asked to wear ear defenders.

Absorbing noise is the first option, but you can also follow the ABC mantra and either block or cover the noise too. A second product, the Logison provides an acoustic network that masks the sound level with ambient computer generated noise. Delivered by means of a system of suspended speakers the system ensures a suitable level of sound that prevents individual voices becoming disruptive, raising the ambient noise level and, using the analogy Mark gave, tempering the water, temperate in terms of the levels of noise sloshing around.

Sound is certainly a science and Mark is working more and more with developers to incorporate this technology into new builds but retro fitting is also easy. Mark has just completed a project for a call centre where hanging ceiling mounted equipment cut out the problem of people feeling they were all speaking to everyone else's callers.

If you're frustrated by sound, give Style a call and arrange for Mark to visit you, with an iPad and he can measure your levels and create an acoustic solution that's the perfect formula for you.

ASK THE EXPERT

We popped up to The Gooseberry Bush Clothing & Lifestyle store at Rondels Farm shop at the top of Queen's Road to get some advice from the lady in the know, Shop Owner Samantha Gaudin, about interiors for the home which will look timeless:

"Well I love the soft, coastal look. You have to live with it everyday so gentle, calming colours are always going to be a winner. Sands and taupes make such a lovely base for a home, then it's great to highlight that with a bit of colour and texture. There is a wonderful 'coastal living' theme in the shop at the moment so aquamarine, navy or faded blues are quite prominent and work so perfectly with Jersey houses near the sea. We've just got in some great patchwork quilts, linen and cotton, knitted cushions, as well as lanterns and candles, rope and pebble doorstops, grey-wash baskets and small, versatile pieces of furniture so there is lots to inspire people."

Visit the Gooseberry Bush for brilliant unique gifts; they are a Treasure Trove of home interiors as well as fashion wear and accessories. Plus there is lots of Inspiration!

Trend Spot I SPY.... TIE DYE

An interesting trend which has emerged at the recent interiors exhibitions is a move away from the safe white, camel and cream colour palette that has been dominating the market for so long. Colour is back and here to stay. We're loving the resurgence of tie dye, which is a far cry from the past psychedelic type, and instead has a much more relaxed and elegant vibe, perfect for beach side living.

BUSINESS

SO TELL US WHAT INSPIRED YOU TO GET THIS OFF THE GROUND?

When I was growing up I never really had much direction or idea what I wanted to do. I had always loved sports and I still do, however I was unclear on how I could build on my interests as a career.

It wasn't until I started traveling to the far East that I discovered yoga, meditation & the art of massage and that's when things started falling into place. I enrolled on my first thai massage course in 2006 in Chang Mai and have been practicing massage on my friends and family ever since.

Since then I have always relished the idea of running my own business, to guide my own path and make my present and future happen. I want to be able to work hard and reap the rewards for myself.

WHAT DID YOU DO PRIOR TO THIS BUSINESS?

A bit of a mixture really. When on my travels I made the most of my time by learning as much as I could either by enrolling on courses as I did in Thailand or mastering the art of meditation & yoga at Isha Yoga Foundation in India. Of course these escapades would require funding & I was really fortunate to find work in the finance industry when back in Jersey.

DID THAT TEACH YOU ANY LESSONS ON HOW TO SUCCEED?

Of course! Everything I have done so far has been building up to this moment of starting my own business. The lessons I learnt on my travels and working in finance have been mutually beneficial in starting my own company.

WHAT'S THE HARDEST LESSON YOU HAVE LEARNT SINCE STARTING YOUR BUSINESS?

So far it has to be patience and self-belief. Things may not move as quickly as you would like but it's important to remain calm and have faith that it will all come together. When starting up a business everyone has an opinion and generally want to help, however it's important you remember why you started in the first place and remain true to your values.

ANY FUNNY STORIES SINCE STARTING THE BUSINESS OUT?

Not really anything I can mention although my family & friends do keep asking me for 'mates' rates. (What about the happy endings? *Ed)

WHAT ARE YOU PLANS FOR THE FUTURE?

I think the most important thing for the future is to keep adapting and evolving my skills in the therapy industry. Its important for me to take on my clients' needs and adapt my work so they feel the benefits. At this time its important for me to make people aware of the amazing benefits of thai massage therapy however I do hope to incorporate more aspects and techniques as I continue to learn more.

WHAT ADVICE WOULD YOU GIVE TO WOULD BE ENTREPRENEURS?

Once you have an idea you have complete faith and belief in, start preparing today! Don't wait for the right time, you can start the planning now, my only regret is that I have waited this long to do what I really want to do. The disappointment you will feel if you don't follow up on your ultimate goals will always out way the fear.

ABOUT THE BUSINESS

MM Thai Massage Therapy is a unique way to receive an opportunity to release those day to day aches and pains you may feel. First and foremost the intention behind the therapy is to give you the opportunity to relax in a soothing environment while receiving a therapy which originates from the northern territory of Thailand. Travelling around Thailand over the years I have experienced all sorts of different techniques, rhythms and ideas. My goal was to incorporate the bits I believe are the most beneficial and deliver them as a service. The great thing about Thai massage is that there is so much that its impossible to fit it into one session so no two massages need ever be the same. In fact traditionally Thai massage is often performed in a two hour session to deliver its full potential. Being a therapy, after your first initial full body massage I like to take on the needs of the client, discuss areas which they feel may need additional work so in the future I can design a massage individually for them.

The Atlantic's new website, tell your off island friends to check it out

Be a virtual tourist

Following 12 months of development work, last month saw the launch of an improved, responsive website for Jersey's Atlantic Hotel, making the luxury establishment one of the very first hotels in Europe to truly embrace the latest responsive technology. Designed and developed by local agency Switch Digital the enhanced website has been designed to be mobile and tablet-friendly in order to meet the growing demands of today's digitally savvy consumer. The development of the site is testament to the quality of on Island service providers and the burgeoning local digital sector.

Discussing the project Managing Director of Switch Digital Damon Eastwood said, "We were particularly pleased to work on this prestigious project as previously a UK agency held the account. The design is an evolution of the old site, so to existing customers it will be comfortably familiar, however there is a host of additional functionality. Due to the responsive design it is much more accessible and the information on the site is more up-todate. The use of tools such as Google Earth and Google Streetview will give a better context to the unique world-class location of the hotel."

LOCAL BUSINESS CRACK SINGAPORE VAULT MARKET

Jersey based GoldMoney has expanded into Singapore with the opening of a new vault facility in partnership with Brink's. GoldMoney offers customers an easy and secure online platform to buy and store physical gold, silver, platinum and palladium. GoldMoney opened its Singapore vault facility on 11th December and is already storing nearly US$50million (US$48.8m) in gold and silver bars.

GoldMoney which was established in 2001 has grown to 62 staff globally, with 32 of those positions in the Jersey head office. It is in the process of recruiting more staff to develop the business further. Mr McGowan said 'We've seen continued interest from people keen to protect their assets from the current economic uncertainties by buying gold and other precious metals. Historically gold has been an excellent way to preserve purchasing power over long periods of time. For example, today it takes almost the same amount of gold to buy a barrel of crude oil as it did sixtv years ago. This is in stark contrast to the price of oil in terms of national currencies such as the US dollar.

GoldMoney currently has just under 23,000 customers worldwide with nearly US$2 billion of precious metal in storage.

Sponsor of the Business of the Year Award

JT is proud to once again sponsor the 'Overall Business of the Year Award' in this year's Jersey Enterprise Awards for the seventh year.. Innovation in business is at the heart of every thriving economy and we are pleased to have been associated with recognising business excellence since these awards began over ten vears ago.

Today, there are some 436 people working for the JT Group around the world who are working hard to help us realise our vision, which is to make us the partner of choice for global telecoms innovation. Following our acquisition of Worldstone last year, we now have presence in Europe, Asia and the United States. This acquisition and integration of Worldstone into the JT family is just one example of our commitment to continue to evolve and innovate in order to ensure we are better able to service our customers' needs, where ever they may operate.

However, it's not just JT who are raising the bar in order to prosper; every year local Jersey businesses demonstrate even higher standards of excellence as they are continually challenged during these tough economic times. But it's more than just rising to the challenges of today's business environment; it's what differentiates you from your competitors through demonstrating strengths such as entrepreneurial flair, developing your people to help you achieve your vision and excellence in customer service. These are also just some of the strengths that are considered during the judging of these awards.

All of these sit at the heart of JT and it is for this reason that we are pleased to once again be involved with these awards that recognise and honour the work of businesses that have demonstrated high ambition and a vision of their own. Jersey is dependent on those businesses and people who - like JT - can draw on their innovation, enterprise and its people to reach out and carve them-selves a place in Jersey's future.

ALTIS PARTNERS

Sponsor of the Small/Medium Business Award

This is now our fourth year of sponsoring the Jersey Enterprise Awards and we are delighted to be involved in a worthwhile program of supporting the business community in Jersey by recognising excellence found in locally based companies. From our early days as a start-up we understand the challenges of starting a business from scratch and running it day-today. This is especially testing in the current difficult economic conditions, but we have been very encouraged by the determination and innovation shown by applicants for these awards. Last year's winner in this category, The Inn, won against some excellent competition.

The awards process is not just one evening a year of fine wine and dining - entrants have to work hard behind the scenes to explain their business model and support their application, and there is a demanding evaluation process. The payback for this effort, aside from the public recognition that the winner receives, is access to many experienced entrepreneurs and advisors who are only too pleased to help and give advice.

Altis Partners has always lent quite heavily on advice offered locally, either through our interaction with government, their agencies, or industry groups. Without this support Altis would not have become a leading alternative investment firm. We think that these close industry-government relationships are something that makes Jersey different.

Currently Altis manages over $800m of client assets for institutional investors around the world, and has annualised investment performance at over 11% since we started managing money in July 2001. Many of our investment professionals have been bought

JERSEY ELECTRICITY

Sponsor of the Environmental Award

Jersey Electricity's core objective is to provide affordable, secure and sustainable energy. We aim to protect our unique and precious environment in Jersey and do whatever we can to conserve resources. including encouraging our customers and suppliers to do the same. Decarbonising our energy supply chain has been a key thrust of our efforts. We are proud to have reduced Jersey's overall CO2 emissions by a third over the last 20 years by investing in undersea supply cables to replace on-Island oil-fired generation with cleaner, low carbon supplies of electricity from mainly nuclear and hydro sources in France. This reduction has been achieved despite a 40% increase in demand for electricity.

We encourage and offer a free advice service on how to use energy more efficiently, to help consumers get the best use from their electricity supply. We are pleased that our £0.5m donation to the Energy Efficiency Service is being put to good effect in making a real difference to energy bills and comfort Energy consumption is one of the leading issues when considering a business's environmental impact. levels of vulnerable islanders.

is fitting that we sponsor the Jersey Enterprise Environmental Honour and we are delighted to do so. Now in its fourth year, we never cease to be amazed at the ideas and efforts of local businesses and other organisations to create new innovative business opportunities that have the environment at their core or reduce the adverse effects their activities, or those of their customers, have on our special island environment.

We ourselves continue to learn and improve from the ideas shared in this process and by sponsoring this award we aim to both raise the profile of those organisations and share best practice.

NATWEST

Sponsor the New Business of the Year

New businesses, large or small, remain key to the success of any economy and we must continue to invest in our business sector to ensure Jersey has a healthy and vibrant economy. Despite challenging times, NatWest fully identifies the contribution that young businesses make to the Island and we continue to support our business clients' growth aspirations whether through lending, overdrafts, asset finance, invoice finance or trade finance. We are dedicated to helping our clients get ahead for business by sharing our customers' ambitions, delivering our business expertise and making it simple.

We are delighted to have supported this prestigious event since inception and are proud to recognise the achievements of those businesses that are excelling in times of adversity. We have a strong track record of supporting the business sector and we are pleased to continue sponsorship of the Enterprise Awards. The awards we feel are an excellent showcase of all that is good in Jersey and we believe encourage innovation and entrepreneurship.

In the category of New Business of the Year, the judges will be looking for organisations that can illustrate the development and deployment of a clear business strategy that has helped deliver their ambitions and overcome business challenges. Organisations short listed will demonstrate the need in the market they are fulfilling and how their business is adding value to the customer. NatWest is keen to celebrate and recognise those businesses that are encouraging best practice. We share our customers' vision and by doing business with us, our customers can be confident that they can realise their ambitions.

INDIGO LIGHTHOUSE GROUP

For the past ten years the judging panel for this award has witnessed an amazing array of entrepreneurial talent which is so important for the continued success of Jersey's economy. Indigo Lighthouse Group operates worldwide in forty-nine countries and is a world leader in contact lens customer management. We have established strong links with China and see this as a large market for our continued growth. Within our organisation entrepreneurial skills run deep and this is the reason why Indigo Lighthouse has been supporting Jersey Enterprise Awards since their inception and is proud to be still involved ten years later as a sponsor of the Entrepreneur of the Year Award.

Determination to succeed, innovative ideas, creativity and vision are all attributes associated with entrepreneurs in business. This award aims to recognise an individual, be they self employed or part of an organisation, whose activities and achievements have reflected such attributes. Past winners of this award have come from very diverse backgrounds, therefore this category is open to all those who have demonstrated flair through a specific project or by starting up and running their own business.

Having selected winners for the award for the last decade we have gained tremendous satisfaction observing the progress of the winners and learning of their continued success. We hope and believe the winners benefit from the publicity gained from their success as reported in the newspapers and promotional literature for introducing business links in the wider economy. Feedback from all the entrants suggests that the articles published by the Jersey Enterprise Board have benefitted the runners-up as well. The selection panel at Indigo Lighthouse looks forward to receiving entries from a wide range of individuals with specialist skills in their field.

GUITON GROUP

Sponsor of Ambassador of the Year

The Guiton Group has been proud to sponsor the Ambassador Of The Year Award since the Jersey Enterprise Awards were created. Guiton owns the Jersey Evening Post and Guernsey Press daily newspapers, together with their associated websites thisisjersey. com and thisisguernsey.com, and Itex, the leading technology company in the Channel Islands. We understand the importance of communication and appreciate that there is a big wide world out there which heavily influences Jersey economically, socially, environmentally and politically.

Whether is it expertise and probity in the finance industry, the beauty of the island and its nature or the skill of increasing milk production of the Jersey cow, it is vital that Jersey has a positive identity in the rest of the world, particularly in order to attract economic activity. But it is not only excellence in the field of business that can draw attention to Jersey and trigger the thought that it would be a good place to holiday or transact business. A variety of people fly the Jersey flag in many different ways and places to enhance the reputation of the island.

Thus the Ambassador Of The Year Award has been won by a wide variety of people and organisations over the years from giants in the finance industry to international sportsmen and world renowned entrepreneurs.

That it has given them recognition for their efforts is not in doubt. We would also hope that, in some small way, it also encourages others to make the effort to spread the word of the many virtues of this wonderful island whenever they can and as far and wide as possible.

VISTRA WEALTH

Sponsor of Entrepreneur of the Year Award

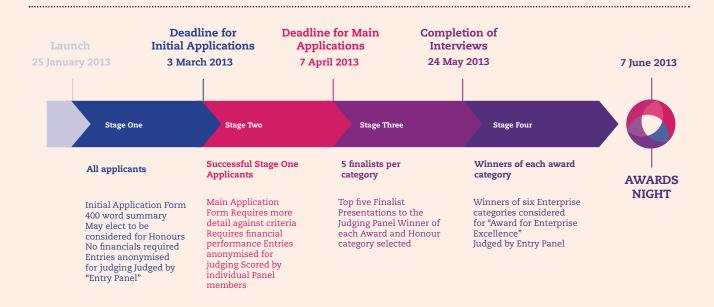

Enterprise is a key ingredient for both new and established businesses promoting growth and innovation, something that is especially relevant this year in the current economic climate.

The Enterprise Awards offer the opportunity to showcase and reward genuine talent and success in the Island across many different fields, business types and sizes with a focus on the delivery of the proposition and customer service excellence. At Vestra Wealth, this sits very much at the heart of what we do and look to achieve, and it therefore gives us great pleasure to once again sponsor the Champagne Reception at this year's event.

Vestra Wealth was established with the clear goal of delivering truly independent wealth and investment management services through a partnership structure to a wide range of private clients and institutions. In order to service those clients domiciled offshore, the group first operated in Jersey as a managed entity before establishing a full stand alone local presence in November 2010.

Our approach is one of uncompromised independence via a thorough and well informed investment process, coupled with the long standing experience and market knowledge of our investment managers who offer independent advice and design solutions on a bespoke basis to meet the needs of each individual client. Very much in keeping with the attributes required by those participating in the Enterprise awards, we look to offer the highest level of personal service to our clients whether it be in the management of discretionary and advisory portfolios, our stockbroking services or administrative functions.

CLODAGH MULLINS

IS AN ASSOCIATE AT DELOITTE

AGE:22

WHAT DID YOU WANT TO BE WHEN YOU WERE 8: A TEACHER FAVOURITE WAY TO RELAX: IN FRONT OF THE FIRE WITH A GOOD MOVIE

FAVOURITE PLACE TO EAT IN JERSEY: SUMAS IN GOREY WHAT'S YOUR FAVOURITE POSSESSION: MY MACBOOK

What made you choose the company you work for?

Deloitte Jersey offered its graduates a choice of what qualification they wish to complete as part of their graduate scheme, which was important to me as I wanted to complete the ACCA. Also the range of industries in which Deloitte operates was particularly appealing along with the opportunities to travel.

What sort of professional training do you take?

I am undertaking the ACCA qualification. The reason I chose the ACCA was due to its international recognition and study pattern, which allows for a good mix between work and study. Instead of being out of the business for large periods of time the ACCA study style is to have 2 or 3 days in study over a number of weeks. The advantage of this for me is that the course work is divided into manageable sections and there is more time to familiarise myself with the material.

What do you do on an average day?

There is no such thing as an average day at Deloitte! Typically I get up at about 6.30am to go to the gym before work and get into the office for about 8.30am. I try to take the time between 8.30am and 9am to reply to emails and catch up on personal admin. Generally I would then talk to the field manager of the job I have been assigned to for a catch up meeting to determine what work is outstanding on the engagement. In terms of the work I could be assigned, it varies a lot! It could be anything from testing balances such as cash or expenses to reviewing board minutes.

What is your next step?

At the moment I am 6 months into my 3 year contact with Deloitte Jersey and I still have over half of my exams to sit, so my aim is to focus on completing the ACCA qualification in the short to medium term.

WHAT DID YOU WANT TO BE WHEN YOU WERE 8:

THE CENTRE OF ATTENTION!

FAVOURITE WAY TO RELAX: IN THE SUN

FAVOURITE PLACE TO EAT IN JERSEY: CAFÉ ZEPHYR,

ROYAL YACHT HOTEL

WHAT'S YOUR FAVOURITE NOISE: JIMMY CARR'S LAUGH

What made you choose the company you work for?

One of the main reasons I was drawn to the Aztec Group was the diversity and quirkiness of their advertising. The question 'do you fit the Aztec mould?' on their adverts immediately gave me the feel of a personal touch by the company and also suggested they are keen to recruit students who they can develop through their career and that is very appealing to a graduate. The recruitment process, 'Audition Days,' was cleverly structured to put you at ease and allow you to be yourself rather than nervous at the thought of a daunting formal interview.

What sort of professional training do you take?

I am currently studying towards my ACCA qualification. The Aztec Group are willing to fully invest in their employees by putting them through their ACCA (Accounting) or ICSA (Administration) exams whilst they learn the practical functions of their roles. They also run their own in-house 'Aztec Academy' which focuses on professional, soft skills and industry specific training tailored to the Group. This a huge bonus to students and an opportunity you would be mad to miss!

What do you do on an average day?

My main daily responsibility within my team is to keep up-to-date with all the bookkeeping for our clients, allowing other accountants to focus on different areas of the work. I also prepare cash balances on a daily, monthly and quarterly basis and perform bank and stock reconciliations at the beginning of each month. I can see how my work and my study now complement each other as I develop my understanding of accountancy and apply it to my work. This confidence and knowledge has enabled me to progress in my role.

What is your next step?

My next big step is to complete my ACCA exams and become a fully qualified accountant. I have recently started the courses for my first written exams, which I will be sitting this summer, but I have a lot more work and further exams to sit over the next few years. I also hope to develop my role further within my team and take on more tasks and responsibilities to build confidence in my ability and also to assist with my studying. So if everything goes according to plan by the end of next year, I will be sufficiently trained and confident to prepare accounts for some of our bigger, more complex funds.

What advice would you give to yourself as a graduate considering the experience you have now?

I would recommend the Aztec Group to anyone looking at a career as a fund accountant. The office atmosphere is friendly and there is a great sense of family here rather than hierarchy. There is a perfect balance between hard and challenging work and social interaction which make for an enjoyable day at the office. Aztec Group is growing and continuing to win clients and I am very proud to be part of it.

What made you choose the company you work for?

Sanne Group has a very friendly working atmosphere. From the very first day of working in my team I felt welcomed and settled in quickly. Sanne has also offered career progression from the start with many colleagues studying for exams or who have just finished their professional qualifications. This enables me to clearly identify future opportunities within the company.

What sort of professional training do you take?

I am currently studying for my ACCA qualification. I was keen to start studying for ACCA as soon as possible due to the career opportunities such a qualification offers. The course is centred around 14 modules with full training support provided along with a complementary workplace mentoring scheme, leaving you with a internationally recognised qualification at the end.

What do you do on an average day?

No two days are the same although they all start with me getting out of bed. Once at work I start by checking my emails and in tray, which usually gives me a rough idea of what I need to complete that day. This can involve anything from sending out invoices to customers, bookkeeping, minute writing, preparing payment instructions, processing dividends and of course no day is complete without doing the team tea run.

What is your next step?

My current aim is to complete my ACCA exams as quickly as possible, while learning as much as I can about the business and working environment. After completing my studies I would like to look at the opportunities Sanne Group has. It is a global company that has offices around the world and ideally I would like the opportunity to experience working in a different country.

I was very lucky in finding a job quickly after leaving university. I would suggest starting to apply for jobs as soon as possible due to the high level of competition. Decide on your career direction from the start, allowing you to reach your goals as quickly as possible.

What made you choose the company you work for?

I chose to work for KPMG as it's filled with genuine people who have a range of different skills and experience which undoubtedly characterises a firm that is a pleasure to work for. Other attributes that KPMG are praised for include the impeccable standard of service they provide which is illustrated by their highly regarded reputation being one of the Big 4. Furthermore, KPMG has a great sport and social ethic which is supported by events being held weekly to accommodate everyone's preferences.

What sort of professional training do you take?

I have just started my ACCA qualification which is set to last around 3 years and should see me not only exam qualified but also time qualified. To achieve this qualification you need to gain 36 months relevant work experience (time qualified) along with passing the 14 Accountancy exams (exam qualified). However, training does not stop there. I am also actively involved with CPD (Continual Professional Development) to further my understanding of certain areas within the Finance Industry, which in turn can enable me to perform to a higher standard when working with different financial service providers.

What do you do on an average day?

It is quite difficult to describe an average day because I am constantly engaging with different clients, completing a range of jobs, at changing locations, which facilitates a working environment that is challenging and highly educational. I am normally involved with testing certain areas of a client's balance sheet or P&L, such as recalculating their fixed assets or revenue for the year and agreeing them to independent confirmations to reduce to the chance for potential misstatements. However, the next day I could be at college studying for my upcoming exams, which further reflects the variance from day to day work.

What is your next step?

I haven't thought too far ahead as my main concern is passing my exams. Ideally though, I would like to be qualified by the time I'm 21, and on my way to achieving a more senior role within the firm, or even take advantage of the secondment opportunities and move abroad to London or further yet. I would also like to experience the other services KPMG provide, such as working within Advisory and gaining some experience there as mergers and acquisitions are a big interest of mine.

What advice would you give to yourself considering the experience you have now?

I personally feel I have significantly benefited going straight into employment as opposed to going to University for the following reasons: I'm earning; I'm in a top firm; achieving a qualification which is highly regarded within the Finance Industry; gaining connections and forming close relationships with my peers who share the same interests; and finally, not having to battle off a student loan!

IS A TAX ASSOCIATE AT PwC

AGE:22 UNI ATTENDED: LOUGHBOROUGH

FAVOURITE PLACE TO EAT IN JERSEY: BANJOS

WHAT'S YOUR FAVOURITE NOISE: THE FINAL WHISTLE AFTER

PLAYING RUGBY

What made you choose PwC?

As a placement option PwC was one of the few companies where I would be able to start building a career with genuine work experience along with the opportunity to study towards professional qualifications. Instead of helping out for a year I am treated just like any other member of the graduate training programme. The firm considers my career in the context of long term employment with them after completing my degree rather than just my placement year.

What sort of professional training do you take?

I am currently studying towards the ICAEW's ACA Chartered accountant qualification which involves 15 exams spread over 3 years. Exams are often sat in 2s or 3s and I get blocks of study leave to prepare for them which nicely splits study time at college and being in the office. During the placement year I will hopefully get 9 professional exams ticked off – great in terms of progress towards my ACA qualification and the first time pass bonus available at work.

What do you do on an average day?

So far the majority of my work has been with the private client and corporate tax teams. The work has involved learning and applying the Jersey tax rules and understanding the way Jersey tax affairs work. I have recently been given a supervised portfolio of clients whose taxes I help manage and often get to meet clients to obtain information and ensure they are compliant under international tax laws. This has been a great way of developing my understanding and ensures that day to day I am constantly learning rather than just doing the same tasks over and over again.

What is your next step?

First time passes in all 9 exams before returning to Loughborough is the plan. Hopefully on graduating and coming back to PwC in Jersey I will complete my study quickly and achieve full ACA qualification. Once qualified, the PwC global network of firms provides many opportunities to temporarily or permanently transfer and work almost anywhere in the world. Working abroad has always interested me. My first step in a career abroad was coming to Jersey for the year so I really hope for the opportunity of a secondment within PwC on the other side of the world at some stage in my career.

What advice would you give to yourself as a graduate considering the experience you have now?

It's the advice many people give but applying early to any role you want is a must. Often people ignore the lack of places and the large number of graduates fighting over them so if your application is one of the first the chance of success is much enhanced. For anyone not yet doing finals at Uni, get as much work experience as possible - it is vital to stand out in a pile of CVs and a successful work experience or summer internship programme will often lead to a job offer. Even if you decided the firm you worked for wasn't for you, you can still use the employer's name and the skills you developed on your CV for future applications, and it ticks that company off as somewhere you won't be applying for.

What made you choose JT?

From a young age I have been interested in the mobile industry and I have fond memories of being in the old retail shop at Minden Place! So JT was an obvious career path, due to being passionate about telecommunications, and being an early adopter of the latest technology.

The graduate program that being offered was one of the main reasons I was attracted to JT. By offering such a well structured program for graduates, JT has put themselves as one of the leaders in recruiting young talent.

What professional training are you undertaking?

I started with JT last September and am now selecting my modules as part of a 6 month on-line diploma in Telecommunications. During my time here I am looking to complete some management training, where there is the possibility of attending intense training courses on the mainland.

Whilst attending Highlands College, I completed industry recognized qualifications, including the CompTIA A+ and Cisco networking certifications.

What do you do on an average day?

The graduate scheme that I am currently progressing through moves me around the business for two years, with quarterly placements. My placement is currently with the IT department. At the moment, my days consist of assisting with projects, and being involved with the largest project, Gigabit Jersey. I feel providing fibre optic cables to the home is a very exciting project to be involved in, due to it being one of the first of its kind, and the possibility of providing the worlds fastest broadband services to consumers.

What's the next step?

The next step of the graduate scheme is to complete a six month placement with Global Propositions. Here I will be involved with consumer product development, and the management of JT's digital channels, which include the JT branded websites. The most exciting and intriguing step on the horizon would have to be the six month international placement. This will include working at a non C.I location with one of JT's acquisitions, whether it's in London with Worldstone, or in Boston or Melbourne with eKit.

What advice would you give yourself as a graduate considering the experience you have now?

One of the best pieces of advice that I can give, is to gain knowledge of the sector you are looking to pursue a career in. This is especially important when choosing module options for the final year of a degree, the modules that are chosen here should relate to the industry you're aiming towards. This will assist with ensuring it is the right career for you. It will provide knowledge that is useful at interviews, and experience that can be applied in the work place. The final piece of advice I can give, is that it's never too early to start looking for graduate positions, get your name out there. By doing this, you show potential employers that you have initiative, and are committed to your chosen industry. It is also important to choose an employer with a successful and proven graduate scheme.

Move up the career ladder with JT

SPORT

With a Swedish parent it was in his blood. However, Roly's other parent is Austrian so skiing is also very much a part of his life. When we had last month's storm conditions Roly seized the day and took to the snow for the first time in Jersey. He tells us all about it and the making of the truly epic shot.

> The opportunity to partake in my favourite sport in my home Island of Jersey has always been a wish that I thought would be impossible to fulfil. I've always loved the thrill and novelty of doing something just that little bit different, whether bungee jumping with skis, parachuting dressed as Jim Carey's 'The Mask' or abseiling from a high rise as Batman. I have skied since I was 8 and worked as an instructor in Austria and completed seasons in Meribel and Aspen but the only skiing I have ever been able to do in

That changed for me this year as Jersey's 'Code Red' meant we were hit by the worst (or best in my opinion) snow storms for 34 years. Two whole days of snow, rather than the usual inch every few years which will last for an hour or two before melting, meant a whole new outlook. The gale force 8 and 9 winds coming from the North/East of the Island which created big drifts and perfect conditions.

When the winds dropped and sky cleared a friend, Christian Boletta, and I packed our skis and got into the car to go and view areas we thought might be skiable. We met someone who mentioned that a lip had been created overlooking the majestic bay of St Ouens. We set out to find it and, when we did, we really could not believe that something like it could ever exist over here.

We took some shots but only on our phones and then the night set in so we had to head home disillusioned by the fact we had no substantial photographic evidence to document such a rare experience! That night, however, I called up a very good friend of mine and professional photographer, Matt

Porteous, and convinced him that this would be a shot for the Jersey history books so we met up early the next morning.

The problem then was that the big thaw was setting in. However, the sun was out and the overhang was still in one piece. Whilst getting ready to take our walk from the beach car park through the sand (see 'snow') dunes I found a pair of my sunglasses from a 70s entertainment show I have called 'The Disco Sensation', so jokingly I put these on for our first photo of our trek. Matt loved them so I kept them on for something a bit different and that's what we got! We headed up to the overhang and although the snow was getting thinner and heavier it was still very doable and all I had to do was avoid all the brambles at the bottom where the runout flattened, which I hasten to add was not always achieved! After a few scratches and thorns in my side I took the walk back with a big smile on my face knowing that nobody that I am aware of had ever done this in the Channel Islands and it's unlikely that anyone will for a very long time!

GALLERY'S MONTHLY PAGE DEDICATED TO JERSEY RUGBY,

t's all building up to a nerve-shredding finale to Jersey's first season in the lofty heights of the RFU Championship. Playing in the second tier of the English league structure has meant Jersey have been ranked as one of the top 24 teams in the country. Tough? You bet it has been, and Director of Rugby Ben Harvey says that retaining this status would be his biggest result in five successful seasons.

Whether or not Jersey are still playing at level two in 2013/14 depends on the Islanders maintaining a narrow advantage over Doncaster Knights, who at the time of writing were sat uncomfortably on the trapdoor marked relegation.

Barring unforeseen results during the final two weekends of March, while Gallery is rolling off the presses, it may all come down to what will effectively be a one-match eliminator: Jersey host Doncaster on Saturday, April 13th at St Peter (kick-off 3pm), and the victor that day may well end up dodging the bullet marked relegation.

Home advantage is one comforting factor for the big game, and Jersey have had an average of 2,000 fans this season, well ahead of the 1,100 who on average attend games at Castle Park in Doncaster. But for a significant contest like this one, Harvey will be disappointed if there isn't way above the norm, both in terms of numbers and noise levels.

The first two weekends of March saw Jersey play successive away matches. Life on the road had proved especially tough so far this season, with seven straight losses before the trip to Richmond to play London Scottish. In the end it was another defeat, albeit one that featured five tries and a bonus point for the visitors, eventually defeated by 41-33.

The London visit showed that it could be done, and seven days later - hallelujah! The elusive road win was finally secured at Plymouth Albion courtesy of a gritty 15-19 victory. A perfectionist like Harvey pointed out that it should have been a more comfortable result, but nevertheless his side had withstood a brave comeback by the men from Devon, surviving in spite of having front-row stalwarts Jon Brennan and Dave Felton stretchered off (both thankfully avoided serious injury).

Two days after the Plymouth game, Snowmageddon hit the Channel Islands, and it looked likely to scupper the rearranged home game against Nottingham. The tie had already fallen victim to the weather once, when the fortnight of heavy rain that fell from the start of February left the pitches at St Peter muddy, with the unimpressed visitors claiming the going was unplayable and persuading the referee to postpone the match.

Happily, the rearranged contest did take place, and on the main pitch at St Peter, after a heroic clearing of snow that at one end of the ground had drifted up to the 3ft height of the perimeter fencing.

Nottingham were second in the table going into the game, and also at the end after a hard-fought 13-20 victory. Jersey had to make do with the losing bonus point awarded to teams losing by seven points or fewer, and knew that they could perhaps have won the game by scoring more points during a dominant first-half display.

Newcastle Falcons carried on sweeping all before them in the Championship, registering an 18th successive win - bad news for Jersey RFC, who were due to travel to the north-east on Good Friday.

Wales did some impressive sweeping of their own, brushing aside England by 30-3 to claim the RBS 6 Nations title on a tumultuous last day in Cardiff.

Junior side LQ Lydian Lions overcame the disappointment of defeat in the Hampshire Cup semi-final to beat Jersey Athletic - the JRFC second team - by 29-27 in a local league match.

JRFC Treasurer Adam Budworth and his wife Glenda face a long road to recovery after being trapped under a falling tree on the Railway Walk during the blizzard, both were seriously injured.

In the 6 Nations, England lost the Grand Slam, and the Championship, through the meltdown in Cardiff, while France claimed the unwanted wooden spoon prize for last place.

Premiership side Saracens were criticised for a distasteful stunt featuring a large woman (actually a bloke in drag) warbling Nessun Dorma during the final minutes of a game, intended to be an enactment of the famous 'when the fat lady sings' cliché.

Opportunities Achievement Success

A MOTORING LEGACY

rguably Jersey's most successful sporting figure, Nigel Mansell was yet to hit the heights in the 1980s. The St Brelade resident raced in his first Grand Prix in 1980, and in 1984 his best Formula One finish was a brace of third places in France and The Netherlands.

It was actually into the next decade when Mansell won the F1 world title in his 13th season - 1992 - but his career, and the moustache that used to be his trademark, were built on 1980s foundations.
2013 sees the opening of The Mansell Collection, which houses 'The Story' - an amazing collection of cars, trophies and assorted memorabilia.

Few drivers enjoyed as much success, and none would be able to boast the same collection - throughout his career Mansell's contracts stipulated that he retained the trophies he won. The average motorsport trophy certainly isn't understated - think vast chrome or gold-plated orbs, decorated with sponsors' logos, or etched crystal vases the size of paddling pools - so it's just as well there's plenty of room in the upstairs floor of the former St Helier Garages' depot.

The building dates from the Victorian era, but its distinctive lines date from an art deco revamp early in the 20th Century, and have been retained in a sensitive and painstaking project.

After checking out some of the most eyecatching trophies, such as the Brazilian Grand Prix from 1989, visitors can then check out the actual car Mansell won it in, the Ferrari 640. F1 cars are surprisingly small when you see them at first-hand, but the sleek curves are every bit as striking as one might expect.

Alongside the 640 is the FW14 in which Mansell raced after leaving Ferrari to return to the Williams team in 1991, winning the world title the following year. The upstairs space can also be hired as a venue for functions, suitable for both social events and business meetings, while the lobby areas include dozens of items of non-motorsport memorabilia (it's amazing what you can get in exchange for a pair of race-soiled driving gloves...).

The ground-floor showroom provides an opportunity to buy a 'pre-owned' (sounds much more enticing than 'second-hand', doesn't it?) car from a hand-picked selection. The range is wider than you might think - sure, there are 'six-figure' price-tags such as Ferraris, Lamborghinis or perhaps an Audi R8, but there are plenty of more affordable options.

The Mansell Collection is at Route de St Aubin (the 'Inner Road') at First Tower. Admission prices: £10 (adults); £5 (OAPs and under 12s); free (under 6s). Opening times: Monday to Friday 2pm to 6pm; Saturdays 9am to 6pm. Tel: (01534) 880606. Web: www.themansellcollection.co.uk

The European Le Mans Series race winner has been confirmed to drive Fortec AMG Mercedes SLS GT3 at Oulton Park, marking a return to the team Walker drove for in F3 and World Series by Renault.

The 29-year-old will drive Fortec Motorsports' AMG Mercedes SLS GT3 car in the opening round at Oulton Park on April 1st. For Walker, it marks a return to the team where he scored International success in both F3 and World Series by Renault and a circuit where he wrapped up his Junior Formula Ford title.

Runner up in the GT category of the European Le Mans Series for the past two years, Walker believes that as well as his experience of the tracks, his vehicle development role at Wirth Research will benefit the team as it starts to unlock performance in the car.

In addition to the British GT outing, Walker is soon to release his plans for International outings this season. "I am in discussion with teams for European Le Mans Series, ALMS as well as racing in Asia. It's shaping up to be a very busy year," concludes Walker.

SURFING ROUND THE BAY

After 25 years in its current location adjacent to the Watersplash, the Jersey Surf School is moving round the bay to Le Braye with the support of Penny Setubal at Pure Adventures.

The award winning business caters for both locals and visitors alike and with highly qualified and accredited staff has taught in excess of 5000 students to surf, as well as offering surfing as an activity to schools, clubs and youth groups in Jersey and further afield. Many schools and groups from the UK choose the Surf School for their summer based activities.

Internationally recognised as the only ISA approved centre in the Channel Islands, the Jersey Surf School has also been chosen by surfing brand Quiksilver as one of only five UK based surfing academies. As a direct result the school offers the highest standard of equipment and also promotes competitions on the international circuit.

Quiksilver also promotes the Jersey based business throughout its nationwide outlets and on its global website.

As a locally grown brand, the school recognises its commitment to the community and works closely with various charitable organisations and care centres, such as Children's Services and Help for Heroes. The instructors also work alongside specialised care groups, helping to deliver tailored surf lessons for those challenged by mental and or physical disabilities.

Commenting on the move George Solh, Manager at Jersey Surf School and the Channel Island's most qualified instructor said, "The service we offer is unique and that will be unchanged in our new location. We enjoy an excellent health & safety record and the business is a vital cog for teams who represent the Island on the National and International circuit as well as in the development of surfing locally".

We were really impressed with their ON Running shoes which 'land soft, push off hard'. ON trainers feature the first cushioning system that is only active when you need it - during the landing. These clever, Swiss engineered, shoes are light and comfortable and available in a range of colours. Well worth a try if you are looking to get into running or have a marathon coming up!

LIKE A ROBOT FROM 1984...

THIS MONTH GALLERY IS ALL ABOUT RETRO GADGETS - DEVICES THAT HAVE EITHER BEEN BROUGHT BACK FROM THE GRAVE OR THAT HAVE BEEN GIVEN A MODERN TWIST TO MAKE THEM 21ST CENTURY USER-FRIENDLY.

With technology reaching ridiculous new horizons nowadays, it seems that there's a growing trend for gadgets that hark to the old school and give us warm, fuzzy memories of 8-bit graphics and ergonomically rubbish control pads. Gallery recommends the following lot...

POLAROID Z2300

Anyone remember when you used to take pictures of stuff, and then you'd put them in a book, called an 'album', and occasionally you'd sit with your friends and family and look at the pictures and reminisce? Well, that's all been ruined by digital cameras and Facebook, as we don't need real photographs any more do we? Just stick 'em online and share them with the world and hope you don't forget your password Well good luck with that sunshine. Me? I'll be investing in a Polaroid Z2300, a 10 megapixel digital camera which instantly captures, edits and prints photos with ZINK technology, which you can then shake, blow and stick on your fridge just like the old days. Of course you can upload your pics to your 'puter from it, but I'm a purist, I'll be printing hard copies only. See you when the Internet breaks.

AVAILABLE FOR £169.99 FROM POLAROID.CO.UK

USB MIXTAPE

One of the many things that mp3 technology ruined (aside from the entire global music industry and the creeping acceptance of sub-par sound quality) was the romantic tradition of exchanging cassette mixtapes with the guy/girl you fancy. As a romantic gesture, it was perfect and practical - a calling card to demonstrate how cool and hip you are (you'd stick a couple of My Bloody Valentine B-sides that you never listened to to demonstrate this) and a chance to show your sensitive side by using the poetry and musical genius of others. Or, being less cynical, it was just a nice way to get to know each other and also showed that you'd put time and thought in; picking out your tracks and actually recording them to cassette would take a good few hours.

Burning songs off iTunes on to a CD isn't the same, and sharing a Spotify playlist is even less romantic, seeing as it takes all of 10 seconds. The USB Mixtape is basically a USB stick in a cassette-shaped gift pack, so on one hand it's a bit of a cop-out (the process still takes all of 10 seconds), but it's a sweet little way to say, awkwardly, "Um, I kind of, y'know, like you."

AVAILABLE FOR £20 FROM SUCK.UK.COM

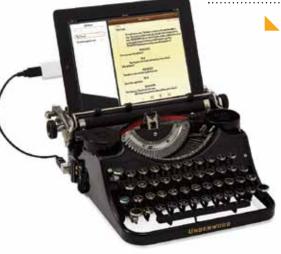

You can do all sorts with timetravel – fly on a hoverboard, punch a cowboy, snog your mum, maybe tip your arch nemesis in manure – the world is almost literally your oyster with a Flux Capacitor. One drawback – it requires 1.21 gigawatts of power so you'll need a not insignificant amount of plutonium to power it, which you'll probably have to blag from some Libyans (Diamond Select Flux Capacitor, overleaf)

BERLIN BOOMBOX

Designed by Berlin-based illustrator and designer Axel Pfaender, the Berlin Boombox is yet another startup crowdfunded through Kickstarter.com and is an incredibly cool alternative to your typical mp3 player docking station. It comes as a kit containing a corrugated cardboard shell and speakers, which you assemble yourself - apparently it takes around 15 minutes to build and even the intensely stupid can do it – and then you're ready to plug in your iPod. As well as giving your mp3 player a much bigger sound (and you can download an app to further optimise your audio output), it's got a neat, minimalist look to it, and you'll look proper cool walking down the street with it on your shoulder, blasting out a bit of Grandmaster Flash.

AVAILABLE FOR £56 FROM BERLINBOOMBOX.COM

USB TYPEWRITER

Anyone bold enough to describe themselves as achieving "groundbreaking advancement in the field of obsolescence!" deserves a high five at the very least, and US hacker/engineer/designer Jack Zylkin deserves that and more for coming up with the USB typewriter. USBTypewriter.com sell typewriter conversion kits, which allow you to turn any old classic typewriter into a keyboard for your computer, or to use it to type directly on to paper as usual whilst electronically recording your keystrokes. Converting your typewriter might take an afternoon or so, but there's also the option of purchasing a range of original, restored vintage typewriters through their online store. If you've ever wanted to recreate a Hunter S Thompson-style bender/writing marathon but felt that it wasn't the same without the clunking of mechanical keys, this is just what you need. Possibly the best gadget ever. CONVERSION KITS ARE AVAILABLE FOR £50 FROM USBTYPEWRITER.

FLUX CAPACITOR V

If you don't know what a Flux Capacitor is, then you haven't seen Back to the Future. If you haven't seen Back to the Future, you'll need one of these to go back in time and tell your mum to make sure you watch Back to the Future. Or something. Anyway, stick one of these in your car - preferably a DeLorean, but any car will do - hoon it up to 88mph (on private property of course. Gallery does not condone speeding), and you'll be able to traverse back and forth through the years at your pleasure. You can do all sorts with timetravel - fly on a hoverboard, punch a cowboy, snog your mum, maybe tip your arch nemesis in manure - the world is almost literally your oyster with a Flux Capacitor. One drawback - it requires 1.21 gigawatts of power so you'll need a not insignificant amount of plutonium to power it, which you'll probably have to blag from some Libyans.

THE DIAMOND SELECT FLUX CAPACITOR REPLICA IS AVAILABLE FROM AMAZON.CO.UK FOR £461.85

iCADE iPAD ARCADE CABINET

Once upon a time, there was an incredible place full of wonder, magic, mystery and kids smoking outside. That place was called Funland and it played a key role in the formative years of many a local whippersnapper/scallywag. It was of course, for those too young to remember, an amusement arcade and it was never replaced, either physically or in our hearts. Now, however, you can recreate your own private Funland with this rather brilliant iPad attachment. All you do is slide your iPad in and it uses Bluetooth to connect to the cabinet, transforming it into an arcade game machine. Download the free Atari Greatest Hits app and you've ready to go with a shedload of classic arcade games. The perfect way to recreate your misspent youth. AVAILABLE FOR £69.99 FROM AMAZON.CO.UK

CASSETTE TO iPOD CONVERTOR **▼

For those of you old enough to actually still have any of those old mixtapes your loved ones gave you way back when, there's a number of cassette-to-iPod convertors, but one of the best ones is the Tape Express Plus by Ion Audio, the chaps that manufacture the iPad arcade convertor. It's a portable USB tape player which allows you to transfer music from cassette to iPod or computer. It also has its own audio output so if you want to listen to tapes the old fashioned way, you can do that too. If you were canny enough to hold on to all the old tapes you made of the chart rundowns, or had your own favourite driving tape that you haven't been able to listen to in years, well, you're in luck. THE TAPE EXPRESS PLUS IS AVAILABLE FOR £49.99 FROM AMAZON.CO.UK

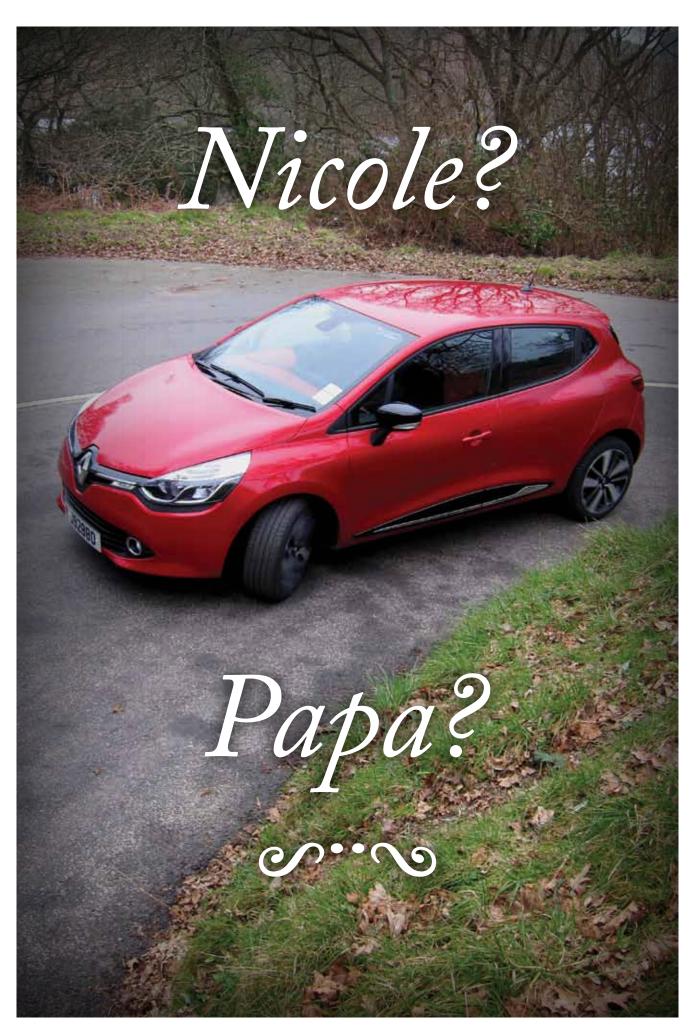

COMMODORE C64X

Back in the early-to-mid eighties, everyone wanted to own either a Spectrum ZX or a Commodore 64. They were the cutting-edge of home computing; the first steps into the brave new digital age for the masses. Compared to even your average modern mobile phone they look positively primitive, but they're arguably as important a milestone in computing as anything Bill Gates or Steve Jobs brought to the world, so there's been much rejoicing since the machine rose like a phoenix from the flames in 2010 with the C64X, a souped-up version of the original, designed with modern technology in mind. It has 4GB of memory, a USB slot, Blu Ray and DVD drive, is compatible with modern TVs and monitors and is completely PC compatible, so you can install the latest edition of Windows. So, it's essentially a modern PC in that familiar retro keyboard casing. But it comes with a neat extra - in the boot menu, you can choose to operate it in emulation mode, playing all the 8-bit Commodore games that enthralled you way back in the day. Hooray.

AVAILABLE FOR £230 - 860 FROM COMMODOREUSA.NET

WHATEVER HAPPENED TO NICOLE? DID HER FANCY BOYFRIEND THAT PAPA SO DISAPPROVED OF EVER GET DOWN ON ONE KNEE? DID HE MANAGE TO KEEP HER CLIO 16V IN ONE PIECE WHILST SPIRITEDLY EXITING THE MANOR GROUNDS? DID THEY LIVE HAPPILY EVER AFTER? DO THEY STILL OWN A CLIO TO NIP DOWN TO THE SUPERMARCHÉ IN?

If those are the kind of questions that have been troubling you for a little while, you might want to seek medical help. If your intrigue sways more toward just what the new Renault Clio is like instead however, you've arrived at the right page.

Without being able to play on the modernretro aesthetic recently exploited by many of their competitors in the small hatchback sector, Renault have put their HB pencils to work effectively to dream up a deceptively tall (good news for passengers in the rear whilst having the height 'designed out' keeps Clio looking poised and elegant), handsome (just look at those wheelarches in profile - where I'd usually describe such a styling feature as muscular, I'm inclined to refer to Clio as 'toned') and bang up to date shape. The rear door handles are hidden in the black window area by the C-pillar which serves to keep the doorline clear and smooth to the point where the rear door almost seems to blend into nonexistence. Beautiful. If the outside takes your fancy though, you're in for a treat once you slip inside.

In stark contrast from the usual sea of grey, Clio's interior is customisable, with colourcoding optional for the entire dashboard covering, door card inserts, seats and the non-leather trimmed area of the steering wheel, and trust me - it all looks stunning. The minimalistic steering wheel controls are handy without being overbearing and let's face it, nobody wants to labour through a heavy instruction manual just to learn how to use your steering wheel. There are audio controls too which feel nice to the touch, tucked just away behind the wheel itself right within reach. The colour-coding doesn't stop at the steering wheel either, because if you opt for the Dynamique S Medianav model you can choose from red, blue or black detailing on the 'Desire' wheels too. The details lavished on these particular wheels doesn't stop at the colour coding to the inner face either, with a 'swoosh' design element to give the impression of travelling at speed, even whilst Clio is stationary.

The matter ed finish on the patterned material covering the dash in the model tested looks soft to the touch and contrasts beautifully with the gloss black finish on the armrests and centre console and the 'hexagon detail' seats look straight out of a seventies science project, and I mean that in the best sense possible, it all works absolutely brilliantly and further complements the chrome bezels around the dials set into the dashboard which sport an element of retro-futuristic seventies space-age goodness whilst also looking completely contemporary. The details don't stop there either, just take a look at the heater vents, a beautifully simple design adorned with a chrome bezel and hiding a chunky honeycomb pattern underneath. The cabin is just a joy to be in, and completely unexpected from a car in this sector. They've really gone the extra mile, so that you can purposely travel those extra miles on your way home just to appreciate your surroundings.

Out on the road there's plenty of punch from that little 1.5 litre, 90PS diesel engine and a surprising amount of grip on greasy uphill corners too, with no loss of traction which can only mean increased safety. The central armrest and armrest integrated into the door cards are positioned ergonomically soundly whilst bolsters on the seats of the Dynamique Medianav models are supportive and again unexpected on anything less than a RenaultSport model which is a pleasant surprise - it seems they've really gone to town with the specifications on this one.

If, however you treat driving as a far more relaxed experience, you can rest assured that accidentally speeding can be a thing of the past thanks to the intuitive speed limiting function on the cruise control system that allowes you to drive completely normally, but just not over the speed of your choice, which is easily reprogrammable on the fly. There's up to 88.3mpg urban to benefit from too if you give the ECO button a prod, which alters the engine map to provide less power and as a result less emmissions and less fuel burn.

Keyless entry is a standard feature across the range, utilising Renault's handsfree key card. Unlike some manufacturers' keyless entry systems where you have to trust the vehicle to have locked as you walk away, with this one you simply press a small button on the door handle to lock or unlock the doors so you can be sure that all of your belongings have been left securely.

The Dynamique and Dynamique S models are fitted with a touch screen Navteq 'Nav 'n' Go' satellite navigation and entertainment system that is a breeze to use and features Bluetooth integration to allow hands-free use of your mobile as well as the ability to access your media wirelessly. On the front is a USB connection and line-in to get your digital music emanating from the speakers if the radio isn't quite doing it for you. There's no CD player of course, because why would you need one these days?

WORK, REST & PLAY WITHOUT COMPROMISE

Do you spend all of your time at work? No, and neither do you spend most of the day watching TV. The truth is, we strike a balance between work and play in our lives, which begs the question, why are so many mobile phones designed with a preference for one type of usage over the others?

Thankfully, the people at Sony have spotted this problem and designed the Android-based Sony Experia S to be there for you, whatever the time of day and whatever you are doing.

If you need access to your emails, there's no problem. The Experia S can sync with exchange servers and popular email services such as Gmail or Yahoo, keeping you connected at all times. Equally, the HD Video camera, all 12 megapixels of it, captures the world around you in brilliant detail.

Gamers will also love the Experia S which comes as Playstation certified, giving you access to a huge range of games on the Playstation Network.

Sony has designed an entire ecosystem around the Experia S that includes accessories such as the Smartwatch. This natty gadget lets you control your phone without taking it out of your bag or pocket. The watch automatically syncs with the handset, letting you see emails, text messages, social media notifications and a whole load of apps at a flick of your wrist.

The Experia S is more than just an all-rounder, it's a phone that keeps up with your busy life whatever you're doing. Pick up an Experia S for just £35 on the Smart400 plan at Sure, buy before the end of June and you'll leave the shop with a Sony Smartwatch worth £89.99, on your wrist!

HTC ONE

With the Galaxy S4 on its way and another iPhone 5 release likely in the summer, this is HTC's attempt to compete in the flagship top level smartphone market.

HTC have built a top quality handset here with a really sharp design and combined it with some of the latest technology - its sleek single aluminium block body gives it a really solid look and feel.

The resolution and quality of the screen is impressive – watch photos and videos come to life, especially as it allows you to stream all of your favourite content onto one screen using a blink feed.

Getting started with the HTC One is really easy with straightforward transfer of contacts, texts and settings from another Android phone, or even BlackBerry or iPhone - this is always the first thing you worry about isn't it?

Fun features include "Zoe" shots in the camera's functionality. You can record 3 second video clips as you take photos and store them in an events highlight folder – a great way of capturing that special event. It also has a neat little infra-red widget that means it can work as a TV remote – hands up who's TV remote control has been battered by kids, pets and lost its way down the back of the sofa?

HTC One is a truly impressive top end smartphone, and by the time this edition of the mag hits our shore it should be sitting pretty waiting for you to test drive it in Airtel-Vodafone's store in Queen Street.

I SPY, WITH MY LITTLE... TABLET?!

With smartphones and tablets now invading helping to run our lives and the ability to use "Apps" to do anything from moving money to setting your Sky HD box to record the F1, you'd think that keeping tabs on your home or business while away should be a relatively simple exercise... Well, yes, with a little investment in the right sort of hardware and knowledge, it can be just that. So what do you need to make it reliable and more importantly, easy!

You need 3 things to make it happen; An IP Camera - These are readily available in Wi-Fi and Ethernet (hardwired) varieties, price depends on quality and application but there's something available for everyone, and a friendly router, which you probably already own - Netgear / Linksys etc. are usually more than capable. Sounds simple right? The Third? It's the most crucial of all - A solid network infrastructure! Don't be put off yet, it's just a fancy way of saying100% secure and reliable!

It really boils down to 3 simple questions:

- 1. Can you get power to the camera positions?
- 2. Can you get network access to the camera positions? (Cat5/6 "network" cable or WiFi)
- 3. Is your home network 100% reliable?

If the answers to the first 2 questions are yes, you're most of the way there already. If the answer to 3. is "mostly" this is where you should concentrate your efforts and possibly where an hour or two of professional support might be welcome.

Most of the issues we see when troubleshooting existing installs (Sonos breaking up, flaky Wi-Fi coverage, slow streaming on fast connections) are down to the "plug & play" nature of contemporary network devices. What's frustrating is that things will appear to work fine most of the time, with a reboot of the router the "fix" when something's not working quite as well it should. This is down to the manufacturers trying to cover every eventuality so their hardware "just works"....until it doesn't... Thankfully a good engineer will spot these shortcomings quickly and often a quick and simple network configuration change is all it takes to be able to answer yes to question 3.

Once the above is sorted, with the camera(s) mounted and the router configured you can download one of many IP Camera viewer Apps available for iOS / Android / Other, Input your IP Camera(s) settings, et voila! Just add a Mac / PC into the mix to record your footage! The best bit is, it can be available to view securely, using iOS, Android or any web browser, live, from anywhere in the world!

OK, so I may have skipped over a couple of the more technical aspects of the configuration, if you're not that way inclined the varying terminology can be confusing. The thing to remember is that it's not 1984 anymore and the cost and complexity of a reliable surveillance solution can be as little as a small flatscreen TV.

Gallery Introducing...
(A man who needs little introduction)

LLOYD YATES

words: Lucy Sanderson | Photography by Storyteller - www.storyteller.je ast time we caught up with Jersey's favourite troubadour, he'd just been given the great news that he'd secured a deal with EMI... That was about a year and a half ago, since then, Lloyd Yates and his formidable band have been gaining momentum and important ears have been listening.

From collaborations with some top of their game artists, to tweets and accolades from UK radio presenters and notable comments from an array of industry types, we're pretty sure it's just a matter of time before Lloyd Yates is up there with folks (pardon the pun) such as Mumford and the likes.

Unlike our previous interview, whereby we sat at the beach chatting and laughing our way through a series of questions, we had to Skype this time, as Lloyd is full time in London with the band... Life is very different in every way – gone is the surfing, the only thing tubes Lloydie's getting these days are underground.

We asked Lloyd about his latest tracks, his thoughts on the massive response they've had on You Tube, what he thinks of London and what he misses about Jersey...

So, Lloyd, for anyone who's been living in a cave and doesn't know who you are...?
I'm a Singer/Songwriter & Father...

And, what have you been up to since leaving the Rock?

We've mainly building up our fan-base in the UK, getting deeply involved in song writing sessions, making our first music video... recording... Loving it. Speaking of song writing, you mentioned in our last interview that 'songs were just coming out of you' and that you had a string of them which you knew would be hits - you were bang on the money as Bring Back the Life (for example) has amassed a gargantuan amount of hits on You Tube. Tell us about that particular track... Ok, well that song is written about the process of being in love, losing everything (or at least thinking you've lost everything) and then realizing that everything is actually just as it should be - that love is always still there. As long as there is love then... You know, like when things fall apart and your ego gets dented, you often feel like you've lost everything; really you just need to wake up to the realization that you're still on the right path and nothing's really changed. Bring Back the Life is going to be our first single, we're working on the video for it at the moment... We're filming the process in reverse, so a love story backwards if you like. The Bring Back the Life video is being directed by a guy called Fred Rowson who is really cool; he's nailed what we wanted to get out of the video - the whole process has been brilliant.

Have you come across anyone we ought to be looking out for?

Mt. Wolf definitely check them out.

When can we see you again over here?

We'll be back for the #triplestoked gig in April... Those are going to be some top gigs... The new layout down the Splash is going to be a great surprise for everyone and better for the artists too. Niall has booked some great acts there – you can catch us on Saturday 20th April (don't miss the other #triplestoked gigs though, they're going to rock).

What are you missing most about Jersey? Well, I miss Alula (*his daughter) then it's got to be the surf, and my Mum's roast dinners!

And give us the pros and cons of London

When we decided to make the move to the UK, loads of people suggested we go to Brighton, so many people said how difficult London would be, but at the end of the day we just wanted to smash it and London seemed like the best place for us to go. As it goes, we made the right choice as London is working out well... I think if you want to do well here, you need the talent and the hard work ethos... You've just got to get right involved. It's all about being in the midst of it all – when you come to London you have to work your ass off. You get to meet people here, people you'd never normally get to bump in to... Here's a good one, I was in a shop the other day, I sneezed and a guy said 'Bless you!', I turned around and it was Will Young. Then again, I was sat having a coffee and opposite me was Laura Marling! I met Jesse Wood too, who goes out with Fearne Cotton, we became mates on Facebook and since then he comes to loads of our gigs – I'd say he's our biggest fan. I sent him the most recent track 'Runs Like Fire' (me and Medhi), he passed it on to Fearne who loved it and tweeted it, next thing it's a smash online. Amazing man. So, there's some of the pros... The cons would have to be the tube... I hate it. But... I am lovin' the people who shout, MOVE DOWN THE LINE.

We said our goodbyes to Lloyd, letting him get back to his surf videos and songwriting...

As he signed off, he did say to make sure we said a big thanks to all of you who have and are supporting him from Jersey – so, BIG THANKS and keep an eye out on Lloyd's Facebook Page for future gigs and the new video coming soon!

CHAKA PRESENTS... K KOKE (ROC NATION)

K KOKE (ROC NATION)
Following their huge BLKOUT event at Fort Regent in March, Chaka return with rising star K-Koke. The first British rapper signed to Jay-Z's Roc Nation label, he represents the brightest hope of UK hip hop and with his new single 'Lay Down Your Weapons' featuring Rita Ora and flying up the UK singles charts at the time of writing, you're likely to have heard a lot more about him by the time he lands in Jersey for a pair of shows at the end of the month. There's every chance he'll be a household name by the time his album lands this summer, with the likes of Emeli Sande and Maverick Sabre guesting to accompany his no-holds-barred, aggressive, truthful and witty brand of hip hop. He'll be playing an under 18s show and an 18+ event on the same evening, with support from MC UG and DJ Bird, and more live acts and support DJs to be announced. If the music industry folks who've been tipping K-Koke for superstardom are right, this'll surely be your first, last and only chance to see the rapper perform in the relatively intimate surrounds of the 380-capacity Havana.

Stoked Promotions return with a series of live music events in the newly spruced up Watersplash beach bar/live room. BY THE RIVERS

Triplestoked kicks off with Leicester-based reggae/afrobeat outfit By The Rivers. The six-piece come armed with a brass section and a dedication to authentic reggae, and have enjoyed radio airplay with Radio One and BBC 6 Music, as well as support slots with the likes of Neville Staple, Fun Lovin' Criminals, John Holt and The Buzzcocks since their musical journey started back in 2010. For those lamenting a decline in live music in the island in recent times, this'll surely be a perfect tonic.

THE WATERSPLASH, SATURDAY 6TH APRIL, 9PM - LATE

BACKBEAT SOUNDSYSTEM

"Traditional reggae music slapped upside the head with a party stick" is how Backbeat Soundsystem describe themselves. Local music fans might remember them tearing up Grassroots Festival a couple of years back, and the nine-headed party monster returns to provide the Splash with a sun-kissed, fun-loving musical kick up the jacksy. With trumpets, sax and synths alongside the rhythm section, they're loud and lively and highly likely to turn the Splash upside down.

THE WATERSPLASH, SATURDAY 13TH APRIL, 9PM - LATE

LLOYD YATES BAND

The final installment of Triplestoked sees Jersey's finest folk troubadour return from his new London home to celebrate the release of his new single. Since relocating to London, Lloyd and his band have gone about the process of winning over an army of new fans, who include amongst their ranks Radio One DJ Rob Da Bank, who says, "If you like Ben Howard, you're gonna love this guy." High praise indeed.

SMILE MONTHLY SATURDAYS

Havana's Chilli Bar welcomes a brand new event from Theology and Jersey Live's Warren Le Sueur and Simon Gasston, a monthly night showcasing the latest house sounds from artists such as, they tell us, Hot Since 82, Waze & Odyssey, Catz N Dogz, Justin Martin, Eats Everything and Shadow Child to name a few. As connoisseurs of house music for two decades now, Le Sueur and Gasston have been at the forefront of the island clubbing scene since before most of the new generation of clubbers were yet in short trousers, so they certainly know a thing or two about getting a party started. What's more, it's free entry!

LAUNCHES SATURDAY 6TH APRIL, 10PM - 2AM, HAVANA CLUB. FREE ENTRY
